THE PIRAT SNOW. BY RALPH WILSON. Once, when Autumn's days were ended,

And the earth looked bleak and bare, And the chilling winds had blighted Every plant and floweret fair-

Winter, with his fey vassals, Passing through the realmeton high, Tarried 'mid' the flowers growing In the gardens of the sky.

Pearly were those sky-born flowers, " orall Booming in the realms of air Whiter than the spray of ocean, Than the flowers of earth more fair.

And old Winter's heart was merry, And in gayety and mirth, Bade the wind the flowers to gather, And to fling them to the cartle.

And the wind, to do his bidding, Sped like arrow from the bow. Gathered all those pearly blossoms, Strewed them o'er the earth below.

And they clothed in purest whiteness, Castle grim and forest tall, But a cunning little elfin Stole their fragrance in the fall.

Blithely danced the little children. Merry were their hearts, I trow, As they watched the flowers descending, Which with laughter they called snow.

On the railroad between Alexandria Egypt) and Sues, recontly finished, there are four locomotives—two of them of English manufacture, and the other two were built at the Taunton Works, Massachusetts. It seems that the Pasha's ears are open to flattery, and the English engineers, through their consul, tried every means to get rid of the American engineers. They were told by the railroad company that the engines would not be used, and their services would not be needed. The excuse for harding them off was that they were not strong enough to haul the heavy trains. One of the American engineers, gutting an opportunity to speak with the Pasha, told him that he would haul us many loaded cars as would reach from one end of the road to the other. Accordingly, seventy-five heavily loaded cars (which were all they could muster) were put in a train, the Pasha's own car attached, and the whole were taken through to Suez, a distance of two hundred miles, in twelve hours, making stoppages for fuel and water.— The Pasha exclaimed, in Egyptian, "God is great, but a Yankee is very near perfection!"
