Best Location for Orchards. MESSAS. EDITORS-Scoing several inquiries in your excellent journal of late, for the bost location for an orchard, I would say to all inquirers, to choose the highest location to be obtained.-The higher the elevation the higher the color of the fruit, and the more cortain the crop. Several years ago I was travelling over Kentucky for days and weeks, and I could not see the first applo, pear, peach or plam, until I camo der their load while all the northern it was so. They certainly were not so far south that the frost would not kill the fruit. No, for hundseds of miles south the frost killed the fruit some seasons. It was the elevation a certain height, and the higher the elevation the better. This was new to me at that
