COUNTMY CIRLS. Mrs. Swisshelm, a female philanthrop the day, in her letters to "Country Girls has a chapter on "Country Feasting," in which she very plainly shows her contempt of sountry life and country institu Whether the good lady has ever been to the country, I have not the meant of knowing; but certain it is that, if she has been to where, as she says, "the birds carry knaponoks, her travels were neither very extensive ner her acquaintances very numerous in it. A few extracts will perhaps best show the ex-174 travagence of her notions and the unreasons bleness of her inferences. She says: ever I hear of fevers and prevalent sickness in some fine country where there is abundance of pure air and water, with no stagment waters to create disease, I ask the price of provisions. If turkeys can be bought for twenty-five cents, chickens for a fip, eggs for three

"Here, in Butler county, I have seen set down for supper, for half a dozen persons, a roast of veal, a great dish of ham and chipped beef, piles of bread and rusk as white as a snow-drift-hot biscuits and finnel cakestwo great pound cakes and a pair of sponge cakes-two dishes of sugar crackers, and as toes-stewed fruit of different kinds, with preserves and jellies past my calculation-oh, ves! a dish of rice, to be caten with cream and sugar; and the whole mixture washed down with hot coffee and tea. It was deemed want of politeness not to eat a part of everything on the table; and just to see a lady where the sickness comes from !

---, have some chicken?' 'A small piece, if you please, sir!'' After describing the order and manner of eating the dainties above specified, she continues, "This is not a soll-tary instance! I seldom saw a tea-drinking party in Butler county, with less catables fight, and elected about half the officers-one than here mentioned; and if any one dis-Inspector, Daniel Snyder; the Assessor, putes my word, let her summon Judge Brodin. More times than two have I seen him

"Now," she centinues, "let any one, even unacquainted with the laws of physiology, imagine a stomach with such a load to dispose of! Is it any wonder we are a nation of dyspeptics? It is just exactly you country girls who make us so

"You will cook and eat, and eat and cook t In Reading the Know Nothings had plot- pamper the appetites of those around you, and to carry at least a part if not the whole, until they distain plain wholesome food. ted to carry at least a part, if not the whole, When a young man leaves his country home, of their ticket, and worked unceasingly, day and goes to a city, he can scarce live, except and night-leaving no expedient that prom- at an expensive hotel. Picking own consumers. The Irish famine never defeats Moses M. Neely, for Justice, by the killed half as many people as the American handsome majority of Sixty-Ning; Levi surplus has done. You bake, and boil, and fry, and stew; worry and toil, just as if penple's principal business in this world was to learn how much they could eat, and out it. Assessor, forty-five-which is among the You kill about one half the traveling preaches lowest of the Democratic majorities. The ers with chickens and other fixings; and my notion is, you might be better employed.

I trust the above extracts are sufficient to general election last fall. A warm battle, convince the reader that the author of them lacks one essential requisite to enable her to write letters to country girls-I mean comion sense. It is not an easy matter to know why a sensible woman, no Mrs. Swiesby the Sheriff and Commissioners on Tuesday helm undoubtedly is, should write such nonsense, unless it be that she wanted to say something good and useful to country girl but didn't exactly know what; or perhanshe wanted to write semething tunny, but couldn't think of a subject. It is true that on first reading her letters, one is naturally led to think that she compliments, rather than consures, country girls for their skill in cooking, baking, roasting, frying, stawing, and so forth; but on reflection, it will be apparent to every person of ordinary compre sension than her remarks are productive of more ovil than good, as they are apt to leave a very wrong intpression on the minds of readers unacquainted with country life. To udge of country people from her descriptions, ons unacquainted with their roul character would suppose them to be little better than a set of miserable gluttons, who live merely to eat and drink, and finally, when naturean stand it no longer, dle of esting and drinking to excess.

Now, I have lived in the country for a number of years, and have traveled thremelt various parts of it; but, except on rare an ! particular occasions, I have yet to cut at a able where the good things were in such rich profusion as Mrs. Swisshelm speaks of as being at her friend's table in Butler county.
To any that country girls, by their conking and baking, and by their pampering the appetities of thuse around them, are the unuse of our being a nation of dyspepties, is certainly a very grave charge, and implies more than could at first appear.

With perhaps an occasional exception (and those exceptions are even to be found in the city.) country people know just as well what and how much to cat as their fastidious city consins, and generally live as long and enjoy as good health as city felias who confine themselves to the strictest regimen. It repaires very little knowledge of the laws of physiology to know that such immederate eating and drinking as Mrs. Swissholm says her friends in Butler county practice would however strong. Those parts of the country where the people, as Mrs. Swisshelm says, "are obliged to eat their surplus produce are now happily very rare and very remote: and I am somewhat inclined to think that Butler county, in Ohio, is not among that illfavored number, as no less than four different railroads centre in it. The idea of the American surplus killing more than the famine in Ireland a few years ago, and of American country girls killing half the traveling preachers by pampering their appetites, is, Cashtown, March 9th, 1859. — N — Y.
