That bound thee here to me-My heart has lost its single pearl, And thine at last is free ; Dead as the earth that wraps thy clay, It never more can love shee. I press thee to my aching breast, No blush comes o er thy brow-Those gentle arms that once carress'd Fall round me deadly now: The smiles of love no longer part Those dead blue lips of thine-I lay my hand upon thy heart. 'Tis cold, at last to mine. We are hencath our native heaven, Within our native land-A fair grave to thee is given In this wild bed of sand : But thon wert single in thy faith. And single in thy worth-And thou should st die a lonely death, And he in lonely earth. Then lay thee down, and take thy rest, My last-last look is given-The earth is smoothed above thy breast, And mine is set unriven. No prayer, no parting prayer-My peristical lave can have-

But a mother s sighs embalm thy corse, And friends' tears thy grave.
