

THE LEXINGTON BATTLE PROGRESSING.
The Lexington Battle is progressing. The Confederates are making a strong attack on the Union lines. The Union forces are holding their ground. The battle is expected to continue for several days.

THE STEAMERS HAVING CROSSED TO THE
The steamers having crossed to the north, Gen. Sturges' command being brought across, and the combined forces numbering about twelve thousand, marching on Lexington, Va. The assistance of Mulligan's battery, and the combined forces, are attacking and completely routing Price's whole army.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT FROM LEXINGTON—REPORTED BY COL. MULLIGAN AND HIS COMMAND TO GEN. PRICE.
Circus, Sept. 22.—General Price's dispatch to the Times, sent from Quincy, Ill., at 1 o'clock this morning, says that the mail agent of the Hamilton and St. Joseph, states that Col. Mulligan and his whole command, at Lexington, surrendered to Gen. Price on Friday morning at 4 o'clock.

THE SURRENDER OF COL. MULLIGAN.
The surrender of Col. Mulligan, at Lexington, Va., on Friday morning, at 4 o'clock, is a significant event in the current military operations. The Union forces, under the command of Col. Mulligan, were defeated by the Confederate forces led by Gen. Price.

THE SURRENDER OF COL. MULLIGAN.
The surrender of Col. Mulligan, at Lexington, Va., on Friday morning, at 4 o'clock, is a significant event in the current military operations. The Union forces, under the command of Col. Mulligan, were defeated by the Confederate forces led by Gen. Price.

THE SURRENDER OF COL. MULLIGAN.
The surrender of Col. Mulligan, at Lexington, Va., on Friday morning, at 4 o'clock, is a significant event in the current military operations. The Union forces, under the command of Col. Mulligan, were defeated by the Confederate forces led by Gen. Price.

THE SURRENDER OF COL. MULLIGAN.
The surrender of Col. Mulligan, at Lexington, Va., on Friday morning, at 4 o'clock, is a significant event in the current military operations. The Union forces, under the command of Col. Mulligan, were defeated by the Confederate forces led by Gen. Price.