battles on record. Four lines of rebels were drawn up in front; of our cannon. The second urged the first upon the sea of flame and smoke at the point of the bayonet, but it was of no avail. it was of no avail. Scarcely a man survived to tell the tale in either line, and the third and fourth, defying all the curses of their officers, thinking only of the misery theywished to avoid, broke and flod, and left us masters of the field. Musket shot, and cannon ball, and gunbont shell poured constantly into rebeldom for a week. It almost sickens me to write it, but Napoleon never caused more blood to flow than has hand. These however would have been es on Friday, sacrifices easily made could they have prevented any loss of life. I regret exceeding-ly light my duty compels me to tell the truth with regard to this matter. Thirty
