Sealed is the voice that used to speak, So gladly of our loved and los And at her name pale is the check, Even of the triends that loved her most. A solemn silence shrines the dead-A sacred hush—a faltering tons; And trembling footsteps slowly tread Upon the spot so late her own.

Not thus I feel her hourly loss-I think of her in light and love; Emblem of life, I view the cross, And faith's ford gake I turn above. I miss her-ah! in every place; Isometimes feel the unbidden tear; I cherish every fading trace, But never, never wish her here. Her tears are past, her crown is won, The immortal wreath is all her own ; I seem to hear the chant begun, Of joy around th' eternal throne. Yes, thoughts of peace and holiness
