the solidors—they know him too well. It is a well known first that Gow. Curtin and John Covode, "honest John," tried to break up the organization of Col. R. Coul-ter's regiment while at Camp Curtin, in 1801 —that after the regment was filled up through the personal exertions of the Col-onel and a few of his personal friends, Gov. Curtin took away three of the companies and gave them to a political friend in the east to make up his regiment, and Col. Coulter's regiment was kept lying in that poisonous, filthy hole,"Camp Curtin, till sickness in it became so alarming that the Governot was forced to let it go—though it then had but nine companies, and soon after the men commenced dying like rot-
