THE CHRISTMAS HOLY-DAY.

GUARDIAN.

So joyfully as this morning, Auguste and Charlotte had not awoke out of sleep for a whole year. The whole night they had dreamed of the brilliant lights of the Clyristmas tree, which had so gloriously shone upon them yesterday evening, when; after patient waiting, the little bell had called them into the parlor. They had dreamed also of the many beautiful presents which their parents had hung on the tree for them, to brighten their Christmas joy.-Reluctantly had they forn themselves away From this scene of joy last might when they retired to rest. But now, as the friendly morning sun began to shine again upon the snow-covered roots, they appeared once more dressed up as for Sunday, ready to heview the tree and their presents, and to make themselves glad with Christmas joy. The morning-passed pleasantly away.— Towards mid day when the rays of the sun head of the sun

GENERAL MEADE

There is great reason to fear that General the West have been clamoring for his remo-val, and the failure of the last movement supplies a pretext, of which the Adminis-tration is doubless very willing to avail itself. It will be quite in keeping with the character of the War Department, should these surmises be correct, to resort to every device to blacken the good name of General Meade, and whatever it may suit Mr., Stanton to do, we may be sure that the Abelition organs and the Loyal Leagues, with their nsual nasty sycophancy, will raptirously apploid; but if it be fated that the milita-ry career of General Meads is not to end, he has made a record for himself which no malignity nor calumny cau ever destroy.-----From the first day that he became connect-ed with the Army of the Potomac, he has done his duty, as a soldier.
