The sun had put his night cap on, And covered o'er his head When countless stars appear'd amid The curtains round his bed, The moon arose, most motherly,

. To take a quist peep, How all the stars behav'd while he Her sovereign was saleep. She saw them wink their silvery eyes As if in rougish play; Though silent all, to her they seem'd As if they'd much to say.

So, lest their frolics should disturb This sleeping king of light, She rose so high that her mild eye Could keep them all in sight.

The stars, abash'd, stole softly back, And look'd demure and prim; Until the moon began to nod, Her eyes becoming dim.

Then sleepily she sought her home, That's somewhere—who knows where But as she went the playful stars nenced their twinkling glare And when the moon was fairly gone The imps with silvery eyes Had so much fun it woke the sun. And he began to rise.

He rose in glory ! from his eyes Sprang forth a new born day, Before whose brightness all the stars

Respect the Ayed.—Many an old person has the pain—not bodily, but sharper still—of feeling himself in the way. Some one wants his place. His very chair in the chimney corner is grudged him. He is a burden to son or daughter. The very arm that proper him is taken away from some that props him is taken away from some productive labor. As he sits at the table, his own guests are too idle or too unkind to make him a sharer of their mirth. They grudge the trouble of that raised voice, which alone could make him one of them; and when he speaks it is only to be put aside as ignorant or despised, as old fash-ioned or obsolete. Oh! how little do youngor persons know their power of giving pain or pleasure. It is a pain for any man still in this world to be made to feel that he is no longer of it; to be driven in upon his own little world of conspicuous insolation and buried enjoyment. This is his condition; and if any fretfulness or querulousness of temper has aggravated it—if others we pity that condition any the less? Shall re upbraid with that fault which is itself the worst part of it-good words?

The freed negroes throughout the country, assisted by tanatical white men, are making great efforts to secure to themselves the right of voting at our elections. There is more involved in this than the mere cast of a ballot. If this privilege were accorded them it would not be long before they would demand and obtain all they desire, through the instrumentality of the political demanquers of the day who hope political demagogues of the day, who hope to obtain, or retain, fat offices through the influence of negro votes. Negro Equality in office, in the Jury Box, and at the Marriage Altar, would speadily follow Negro Equality at the Billot Box.

We hope and trust the efforts of these men will prove unavailing. There was a time when no decent white man could be induced upon man could be induced, upon any consideration whatsoever, to listen with patience to such a de-grading proposition, and we can scarcely believe it possible that our people have fal-len so low as to permit the negro to be clothed with this privilege now.
