Bill's Livice.

Old Bill W was a full blown speci-men of the genius "loafer," and, like many of his tribe, considerable of a wag, mover sparing either friend or fee when a chance occurred for a sell, and frequently "taking in" strangers when opportunity offered—is thus related :

He was standing one pleasant spring day in front of the Pavilion Hotel at A—when a man came along driving a team, consisting of a very large, fine horse, harnessed beside a small, shaggy, inferior looking pony.

"Hallo! stranger, stop a minute," shouted old Bill, and, walking up to the stran-ger's team, he surveyed it with a critical eye for several minutes, finally remarking :

"That's a fine hose you have there, friend—a very fine hose."
"Yes, sir, he is that. Do you want to buy ?" responded the stranger.

"And the pony—is he yours, two?"
"Yes, he's mine. Do you want to buy him?" demanded the driver, beginning to grow impatient at the delay.

"Wal, no, stranger," with great deliberasion. "I don't want to buy; but if I were

Two Major Cenerals. When Major General Slocum, who had taken a leading part in those magnificent operations which gave us pesse and the U-nion once more, was nominated by the Democratic party as their candidate for an office in the State of New York, he at once resigned his military rank, thinking it improper to draw pay from the government

Major General Kilpatrick, who served as thousand dollars per annum in gold, General Kilpatrick resigned his rank as a Major General in the volunteer service; but Auving been previously brevetted as a Brigadier and Major General in the regular army, he goes out to Chile as two "single gentlemen rolled into one," drawing pay with his left hand

These two cases we thus put in juxtaposition and contrast, not for the purpose of gilding the fine gold of General Slocum's honest and honorable course, not vet for the purpose of adding a single touch to General Kalpatrick's inimitable autographic portrait of himself; but simply as affording two admirable illustrations, the one of the Democratic, and the other of the Republican theory of political honesty and public
