The President—I am not quite through yet. Slavery has been abolished. The great national guarantee has been given—one that cannot be revoked. I was getting at the relation that subsisted between the white man and the colored man; a very small portion of white men, compared with the whole, had their master over the colored people of the South.

I might instance the State of Tennessee in illustration. There were twenty-seven non-slaveholders to one slaveholder, and yet the slave power controlled that State. Let us talk about this matter as it is. Although the colored man was in slavery there, and owned as property, in the mass and in the language of that locality and of that community, yet in comparing his condition and his position there with the non-slaveholder, he usually estimated his importance just in proportion to the number of slaves that his master owned with the non-slaveholder. He has never lived upon a plantation.

Mr. Douglas—I have, your Excellency. The President—When you would look over and see a man who had a large family, struggling and upon a poor piece of land, you would find the colored man less of him than you did of your own master. Mr. Douglas—Not I.

The President—Well, I know such was the case with a large majority of you in your sections. Where such is the case we know there is an anomaly, we know there is a blot. The poor white man, on the other hand, was opposed to the slave and his master, for the colored man and his master combined kept him in slavery by depriving him of a fair participation in the labor and production of the rich land of the country. Don't you know that a colored man is going to hunt a master, as they call it? For the next year they will prefer living with a man who owned slaves rather than with one who did not. I know the fact, at all events.

Mr. Douglas—Because they treated him better. The President—They did not consider him quite as respectable to hire to a man who did not own negroes as to hire to one who did. Mr. Douglas—Because he would not be treated as well.

The President—Then that is another argument in favor of what I am going to say. It shows that the colored man appreciated the slaveholder more highly than he did the man who did not own slaves, hence the fault between the colored man and the non-slaveholder is not a fault of the colored man, but of the Government. He is a part and parcel of the political machinery now, by rebellion or revolution, and when you come back to the thoughts of this war, you find that the thinking of slavery was a fault of the colored man. Congress and the President himself declared that it was waged on our part in order to suppress the rebellion. The abolition of slavery has come as an incident to the suppression of a great rebellion. An incident, and as an incident, we should give the proper direction. The colored man went into the war as a soldier, by the operation of the rebellion he became a freedman—equal to a freedman in any other portion of the country. There, then, is a great deal done for him on this point. The non-slaveholder, who was forced into the rebellion, and was a part of the machinery that went into the war, was carried into it, and his property, and in a number of instances, the lives of such were sacrificed, and he who has survived has come out of it with nothing gained but a great deal lost. Now, upon a principle of justice, he should be placed in a position different from that which they were before. On the one hand, one has gained a great deal, on the other hand, one has lost a great deal, and in a political point of view, sorely stands where he did before. Now we are talking about what are the going to argue. We have got at the heart of the matter, we have got to the very essence of the matter. The query comes up, whether or these two races, situated as they were before, without time for passion and excitement to be appeased, and without time for the slightest improvement, whether the one should be turned loose upon the other, and be thrown together at the ballot-box with this animosity and hate existing between them? The query comes up, will we not then compose a war of races? I think I understand this thing. Especially is this the case when you force it upon the people with their consent. They have spoken about government. Where is power derived from? We say it is derived from the people. Let us take it so, and refer to the District of Columbia by way of illustration. Suppose, for instance, then, in this political community, where the colored man is not to have government, must have law—putting it up upon the broadest basis you can put it—take into consideration the relation in which the white race has heretofore borne to the colored race, is it proper to enforce upon this community, without their consent, the active participation of the colored man to color, making it universal?

Now, where do you begin? Government must have a controlling power—must have a lodgment. For instance, suppose Congress should pass a law authorizing an election to be held, and that the colored man, one year of age, without regard to color, should be allowed to vote, and a majority should decide at such election that the elective franchise should not be universal, what would you do about it? Who would decide? Do you deny that first great principle of the constitution, that the colored man, if he is to have a vote, should be allowed to vote, and a majority should decide at such election that the elective franchise should not be universal, what would you do about it? Who would decide? Do you deny that first great principle of the constitution, that the colored man, if he is to have a vote, should be allowed to vote, and a majority should decide at such election that the elective franchise should not be universal, what would you do about it? Who would decide?
