Plow under your buckwheat when half the trees will perfect, and next year plant | table kinds of stock. no buckwheat in your orchards. Unless you use a large dose of lime in your compost, add more around the trees when you plow under your buckwheat. The ashes of the bark and leaves of apple trees contain 15 per cent of lime, and if yours have stood 30 years, they have probably exhausted most of the lime. Buckwheat is celebrated for preventing orchards from giving good apple crops. If your orchard is wet, drain it ; if not wet, then at least use the sub-soil plow and loosen your clay sub-soil. Ordinary caution is only necessary in subsoiling among apple trees ; it will rather benefit them to cut off some of the roots and let them throw out new fibres in search of food. Root pruning is often resorted to, to induce fruitfulness, and despite the many arguments which have been offered against it, I have found practically that old orchards are improved by it when done to a fair extent. I have an old orchard which was considered worthless a few years since, which, since sub-soiling, manuring, and liming, has borne good crops of apples after having refused fruit for many years. ning Rods, and in this alone. This rod has been examined by the most scientific gentlemen in the world -- Pro fessors M'Murtrie, Johnson, Wallor, and many others that have examined them, recommend and speak of them in the highest terms of approbatio and have pronounced them the only safe rods now in use in this or any other country for the protection of Lives and Property. One advantage is to of divide and throw back a part of the electric fluid this enables the rod to conduct that portion of fluid that belongs to the earth without the slightest danger of leaving the conductor. This rod has many other advantages over the old one. The patentee takes pleasure in informing his friends and the public in general that after many years' close investigation and numerous experi ments he has arrived at the true principle o ments he has arrived at the true principle of pro-tecting Families, Dwellings and property from the destructive influence of LIGHTNING
