THE ESTRANGED.

To might I as thy bless of face.
The gentle tones I bear.
As, daening on my troubled rest,
Thy airy form drives near.
I feel the touch of thy dear lips,
The pressure of thy hand.
All in the breathless stientness

Of sleep's enchanted land.

I task anew each lost de light—
Thy ealm eyes seem to say, s

Pride of my heart, it cannot be
That all bath passed away?

The heavenly light of other days
Around my pathway beams,
And on thy check hat thir, alas!
Is only in my dreams?

And memory, with the fadel joys

And memory.
Of dear departed hours,
Comes, I ke the first deliciour breath
off Spring, with bees and fawers;
Again t hear thy lary step.
Thy mosk eye on me beams:
I wake, but oh, to hat that this
Is in my dreams, bright dreams!

Is in my dreams, utget as dear,
With thee I rum each spel so dear,
When most and life were new,
Fre cold in gleet u, on my h art
Had shed its an union dew!
I wake as one whom death had bound
From what hos real seems,
To find, oh true, that then art mine
But donly in my dreams!

Kossuth's Position.

In his farewell speech to the citizens of reference to his own country and the United States as follows :

"It was still more a call of distress in trusted by the voice of mankind to my care, to bring it over to free America, as to the natural and most powerful rep e sentatives of that "Spirit of Liberty" against which the leagued tyrants are waging a war of extermination, with inexorable resolution. Yes, it was a call of distress, intrusted to my devoted, unfata guable care, to remind the Young Giant of America that there is a tie in the destinies of nations ; : n ! that those are d gging a bottomless abyss who forsake the Spirit of Liberty, when, within the boundaries of common civilization, half the world utters in agony the call of universal distress.
