patriotic Ode read by WM. H. EGLE:

THE PRINTER-BOY OF OLD.

We have come here to night, my Licuit,
To celebrate his barth
Who bottled up the lightning and
D.d. chain it taxt on earth—
Of him who crat a typo was,
In after years a ra.e.
Oh the name of that young printer boy
Will live in every age!

He rolled the forms, he scorled them off.
But his is rolled and pressed,
A * upon fair history's page
Both most that he is at rect.
The proofs of all his deeds are read,
The errors very few;
Corrected and review's the work—
A rule for all we do?

And we should learn to follow well

The dask and rule to garde us on, which he hath left behind; So when death puts a period to This mortal chare of ours. This mortal chare of ours,
A section of our life's page may
Be bordered round with flows
