the Legislature of this State have assembled, divided the spoils among their respective party friends, and are now dispensing the results of their profound deliberations. Among the most important questions now before them, is a bill to repeal the act passed last winter, abolishing capital punishment, and making the crime of murder a bailable offence. The propriety of this measure is very questionable, giving Executive Com. - Jas. P. Ross, Lewisburg. those who are able to pay the bail, liberty to kill when they please, pay the ransom, and be free. An incident of this kind happened a few months ago in a small town in Illinois. A traveling circus was exhibiting in the town, when one of the company having an altercation with a by-stander, drew a pistol and shot him dead on the spot. The showman was arrested, held to bail in a very insignificant amount, (compared with the value of human life,) which he paid immediately, and went on his way rejoicing, to amuse the public by feats of "grand and lofty tumbling."
