

Hops! Hops!! Hops!!!

[In some of the interior counties of New York, the growing of hops for beer, &c., and the making of cedar vessels to hold it, is quite a "staple" business. The Editor of the Cayuga Chief, a Prohibition print, undertook to electioneer in the "hop region," just before the late Election. Hear him!]

"I am in the midst of hop-yards, hop-politicians, hop-patriotism, hop-temperance, hop-christianity, and hop-democracy. The fields are fragrant with Seymourism, and incense goes up from every vale to the veto god, who is enthroned amid beer vats and stenching kegs. Every pole is a flag-staff reared to cast a shadow over leavings and homes. Around them rally a class of spirits who would wade through blood and over rotting dead and open graves to a good market! With feet crushing into living hearts, they lift up the hop-yard banner and rally against the inebriate and his wife and children. Their families must be clothed and fed on hop-yeast profits, though their neighbors are robbed of food and raiment in the operation. The sublime gospel of the golden rule, has nothing to do with the hop-yard religion. They love their neighbors, if they raise hops and go for Seymour. When such men die, their graves should be surrounded with stakes of hop-poles: they will reach farther towards heaven than their souls will ever go. Plant hops on the turf that hides them! The creeping vines shall grow rich and fat on their carrion, as they, in life, grew rich and fat on rotting humanity. But, were it possible for such men to reach heaven, they would rebel. The golden fields of bliss would be cheerless without a single hop-yard on which to rest their aching gaze. They would hunt for breweries, and a market. They would turn away from the companionship of angels, and seek some good hop-farm in the "better land." A "good cedar swamp" would be a valuable investment, and in harvest time they would haggle with angels about the price per pound for picking! "God be thanked—ten thousand times thanked—that the dark valley is between a run cursed earth and the land of eternal rest. Hops bloom not in the grave, and the dead have no breweries. And the monarch of the infernal Realm is to much of a Christian to admit the business into his dominions. When the traffick is closed up on earth, its damnable work is finished. "A great deal of money is invested in the liquor business. A great many men have bought farms, expecting to pay for them by raising hops. The Maine Law ought to be kept off a few years on their account! The ruin of a few thousand families and the death of a few thousand citizens, would enable them to get out of debt!"

"I have no hops! I do not want to barter my manhood for such merchandise. I have soil which would grow hops, but, I will not raise bread, it may become a desert. Rather put upon my grave one rag of oak-leaf with a single tear. Than countless blades marked "Seymour and Strong Beer."

"AN ULMAN SPEECH—The New York Times gives the following speech, made after the returns of the election began to be received on Tuesday night. [The gentleman had proceeded some way in his remarks before our reporter could find a pair of shoulders strong enough to bear his note-book with steadiness sufficient to enable him to make a report. When he found a pair (he thinks they belonged to a Whig) he reported thus:]

Never mind—never mind; let em grow! Young America's big round tendom to things, and you can bet they're all right. As to who's elected, gentlemen, I may say I know nothing, [Laughter, and cries of "You're one of em!"] and as to who's got the privilege of staying at home, why I don't know as I want to spoil their night's rest, by telling them—they'll know it soon enough; and what's better, they'll have a peering good idea of who did it. [Great cheering and several hurrahs for Ulman.]

Gentlemen, I don't know, but I kind a guess there's one or two—and perhaps more—smart men in whipland, and I'm sorry for it: but you see it couldn't be helped—I couldn't help it. [Laughter, and "Good for you, old boy!"] Gentlemen, you couldn't help it—I guess. ["You're right again, old fellow—go it."] And I don't suppose, when the returns are all in, the genuine citizens of this great State will think they could have helped it, even if they'd tried.

No! fellow-Americans, it was down in the book, and so nobody's to blame. But, after all, perhaps we've elected a pretty good lot of fellows; and that's some consolation. So now, gentlemen, I think we might just as well "take something," with a good prospect of having it handy for some time to come. Scripture Dick told us the choice was between "Bronson and good rum, Seymour and bad rum, and Clark and no rum!" Gentlemen, Scripture Dick was mistaken. There was more in the political barrel than he could smell through the bung-hole. His nose only touched the head, gentlemen, and he missed "Ulman and all the rum you want," which by large quantities below. [Immense cheering followed the last sentence, and continued even after the assembly had divided and located in the adjacent corner houses.]

The Slave Commissioner, Edward D. Graham, of Philadelphia, died suddenly apoplexy, on Sunday week.
