

Willis' Private Opinion of Gittes Publicly Expressed.

But, to go to town a little often, is your brother editorial suggestion. Once in six months—down and back by the morning and evening boat of the same day—was my last years allowance, and this year I have made it quarterly; and still you grumble. I dare say you will vote me a "virgin with no oil in my lamp," but my city-curiosity flickers with even this much. To go to town seems to me the leaving of what is complete for what is incomplete. I exchange a whole existence as an individual for a two-hundred-and-fiftieth-in at a hotel—a whole conveyance (saddle or carriage) for the twentieth passenger's seat of an omnibus—peace that I control, for perplexity that I don't—dignity and recognition, for dodging and insignificance—glimpses of mountains for glimpses of misery—acquaintances in "wide jaded" for acquaintances in mine.
