than the same area of soil of equal fert lity will feed and clothe one person in State of Maine. In the latter, only crop can be made in a year ; in the I mer, three can be grown, and two of the will contain an extraordinary weight of ganized matter.

It must be remembered that the sa high degree of solar light and heat whi greatly favors the rapid as well as the pr longed growth of vegetation, promotes a in an equal degree the consumption mould, and the exhaustion of the soil, its crops are all removed, or if its tilla be unwisely directed. On comparing the fall of rain in Georgia with that of Ne York, the writer finds that as much wat often falls, in twenty minutes, in th Southern as in forty minutes in the North ern States. Some thirteen inches of w ter fell in the month of July, 1849, in th city of Augusta, Georgia. The mechanic washing of cultivated fields at the Sou is an evil of no inconsiderable magnitude To remedy this, good planters resort to borizontal ditching around hills, or on their slopes, so as to convey by a gentle inclination the surface water off, without cutting deep gulleys in the earth. Many of these conduits are constructed with a commendable skill and scientific engineering, guidety a spirit or water level. The object sought is not to have the ditch so level with the horizon as to fill in a heavy rain and permit the water to break over its bank on the lower side ; nor with such an inclination from the upper to the lower part of the side hill as to create a washing current in the ditch itself. It is also indispensable that these ditches be not too far apart. Too much care can hardly be taken of the soil to prevent its injury in any way. It is hard to persuade men that the intrinsic value of arable land is wholly independent of its market price-that to damage a soil which costs $3 per acre is as injurious to society as it would be if it costs $30 per acre.

The common interest which all have in the enduring fruitfulness of the earth has received very little attention in this country. Nothing is more certain than the fact that a district or State which exports largely the things which nature demands to form breadstuffs and provisions, must sooner or later export also some of its consumers of bread and meat. For the ten years preceding 1846, Ireland exported more bushels of grain than all the U.S. (2.) Altho' much of the grain sent from Ireland was oats, all farmers know that this is quite an exhausting crop. Nor did the people of that ill-fated island restore to their potatoe fields all the atoms removed in crops. Hence the plant failed to a signal degree ; famine ensued, hundreds of unousands perished, and still more fied to England, Scotland, and America. Probably no State in the Union has done so much in the way of exporting its fertilising atoms to other States and foreign nations, and wasting them at home, as Virginia. Next to New York she has the largest number employed in agriculture. The practical result of this policy has been received from Philadelphia a large and excl that she has lost more farm laborers, more citizens and more expital removed with those emigrating citizens, than any other State in the Union. This must always be &c. the case the world over, except where the overflow of great rivers, or other means, serves to renovate the soil, exhausted by excessive cropping, or bad husbandry. The a State can feed and clothe a population ten times larger at home than it can abroad. This result occurs from the circumstance that the peculiar atoms, indispensable to mery, etc. form food and clothing, exist in the soil only to a very limited extent. If this were not the case, England would not send hundreds and thousands of ships to distant islands and coasts to gather the dung of sea-birds solely to increase her annual crops. If no fertilizers were wasted in England, this expense need not be incur-

red. (S.) [Concluded next work ]

1. We greatly need additional experiments to test in a reliable manner both the natural capabilities of soil and the productive power of different fertilizers. The simple fact that three hundred pounds of guano often give a gain of :welve hundred pounds in corn and six hundred in wheat crops is fall of promise in favor of concentrating manures. In hauling out one hundred loads of barn-yard manure, the farmer carries on an average cighty loads of water. Water is often very valuable, but it will hardly pay to haul it half a mile or more, in a cart or wagon, to irrigate a field. The great weight and bulk of manure must be got rid of, without impairing its productive power.

2. See McCulloch's Commercial Dictionary, and the official returns of this country in a table in this Report.

3. For all practical purposes, fertilizing atoms are eternal; and so far as they are needed to form the products of rural inte-dustry, they should be retained in the service of man a thousand years. The whole system of crops forming manure, and mamure forming crops, implies that there should be no waste of the least abundant elements of cultivated plants. An atom of potash, which aids in organizing the elements of water and carbon into starch in a kernel of corn in 1850, may perform a similar function every summer for the next one hundred years, if it be carefully preserved when it escapes from the body of the animal that cats the corn. In all its mutations of position and chemical combination, it can never be aught besides an atom of potush. Being so indestructible and valuable, why annually throw away potash enough to form a thousand million bushels of corn in the United States? What becomes of that contained in all the food consumed by twenty-two million people in this country ? This is but one seem of our loss of this and many other fertilisers.
