BY J. O. WRITTIES.

"Send forth thy light and thy truth, that they me shine upon the earth; for I am an earth that is empty and void until thou enlightenest it."—Tuomas A'Kanra Through thy clear spaces, Lord, of old Formless and void the dead earth rolled Deaf to thy heaven's sweet music, blind No sound, no ray, no warmth, no breath-

A dumb despair, a wandering death! To that dark weltering horror came Thy spirit like a subtle flame-A breath of life electrical, Awakening and transforming all. Till beat and thrilled in every part The pulses of a throbbing heart.

Then knew their bounds the land and sea, Then smiled the bloom of mead and tree, From dust to flower, from moth to man, The quick creative impulse ran. And earth with life of thine endued Was in thy holy eyesight good.

As lost and dark, as dead and cold And formless as that earth of old, And wandering waste of storm and night Mid spheres of song and realms of light, A blot upon thy holy sky, Untouched, unwarmed of thee, am I!

O, Thou who movest on the deep Of spirits, wake my own from sleep; Its darkness light, its coldness warm, The lost redeem, the ill transform, That flower and fruit henceforth may be Its grateful offering most for thee!

"On the North side of the bay is also a succession of hills, some of which are very high, and running in every direction. These bastions and redoubts extend up the bay for a mile or so from the city, and ORDERS for any Books published in this nearly a continual stream of balls across the bay into the enemy's battery which is nearest the bay. I think it very doubtful whether the French would be able to hold this city for any length of time if they could get possession of it, from the fact that the hills on the north side are taller than those on the south, and the city and the batteries on them, I think, would force them to leave it. In the main, they have been attempting this from the land on the south side. I will finish this by saying that it is the best fortified place I ever saw. There is not a hill or a mound where a cannon could be placed with advantage but you can find them."
