Important Invention!

As the Steam Engine is becoming more and more the "power" of the world, every attempt to simplify and to cheapen that power, is of importance to business men not only but also to all mankind. We have to aunounce this week an improvement, worthy of public attention, every-

On the 7th Dec. last, JAMES P. Ross, of Lewisburg, Union Co., Pa., applied for, and on the 221 ult. obtained, a Patent for Improvement in means for operating the Steam Valves in Blower Engines. The peculiarity of this invention, consists in dispensing entirely with the erank, flywheel, and their appendages, and substituting in their stead a very cheap and simple arrangement, by which the movement of the valve is effected, so as to govern and control the action of the steam in its passage to and from the cylinder, and thus give the desired motion to the piston. In other respects, this engine is similar to many in use.

To the question, What are the advantages claimed in favor of this arrangement, we append Mr. Ross' answer, as follows:

1st. In the crank motion, (as every machinist knows) there is a great and unavoidable loss of power, owing to the angle from the line of motion at which the steam acts, there being two points, in each revolution, at which the steam can exert no effective force whatever, upon the work to be accomplished. These are, significantly and appropriately, termed "dead points." They are such in reality, for the crank would never pass them, however great the pressure of steam, were it not for the momentum in the line of motion deposited in the fly-wheel or other machinery during other portions of the stroke. In fact, a direct action is not obtained at any point; the nearest approximation is at the centre of the stroke, the average power being only half what it is at this point. This engine has none of these difficulties to contend with, but allows the full, effective force of the steam to act, unencumbered, in a direct manner. at every point in the stroke. There being no "dead points," the engine will start, (if steam be admitted) as readily at one point

2d. In dispensing with the use of the large and ponderous fly-wheel, crank, couneeting rod, &c., (equal, in many cases, to 25 or 30 tons,) there is also a great saving of power in avoiding the friction which in such cases must necessarily be encountered. There is also a saving of 10 or 15 per cent. in the first cost, as well as in the constant wear and tear. As many persons suppose that a fly-wheel has a tendency to increase the power, it may be proper to state that this is a great mistake, and that it is never understandingly used for any such purpose. It is in all cases a consumer of power, in proportion to its weight. It is only added when necessary as an equalizer, or distribntor of power previously deposited in it, from which fact it takes the name of "balance-wheel."

3d. This engine furnishes a much greater equality of blast, as the pressure never sinks, at the end of the stroke, more than four ounces princh, while with the fly-wheel and crank it usually sinks from twelve to twenty-four ounces, varying according to the speed of the engine.

The above comprises the chief advantages and points of difference.

Mr. Ross does not claim to be the first or only one who has dispensed with the use of the crank or fly-wheel in reciprocating engines, but to have invented a superior plan of accomplishing that desirable object. It may be asked whether this is an untried experiment? To this we answer, that Mr. Ross' first attempt at constructing an engine of this kind, was while in the employ of Messrs. BEAVER, GEDDES, MARSH & Co. The Engine now used by them, for blowing the superior UNION FURNACE four miles below this place, was constructed upon his plan. The steam evlinder of that engine, is 24 inches inside diameter, and 7 feet stroke. The furnace is one of the largest class anthracite furnaces, and has been in successful operation for more than a year. Mr. Ross believes that his present patent embodies a very important improvement on that engine, as it is cheaper, more compact, simple, and harmonious in its operation, which is not improbable, as the one aliuded to was a first attempt, and he says he would be glad to have another opportunity to try his skill.

Pennsylvania Legislature. FRIDAY, Jan. 25, 1856.

The resolution relative to the protection of American citizens in the enjoyment of their rights of conscience and religious practices in foreign countries, was taken up, yeas 51, nays 40.

The bill instructs our Senators and requests our Representatives in Congress to use their utmost endeavors to procure by treaty, for American citizens when traveling, or residing in foreign countries, the unmolested enjoyment of their rights of conscience, the right to have their own public worship where they desire it, and to bury their dead with such religious service as they may desire.

The resolution was then negatived-Yeas 41, Nays 46. In the affirmative, 28 Republicans &c., and 13 Democrats. In the negative I American (Gaylord of Lucorne) and 45 Democrats.
