A Capital Story.

Some years since, an eccentric old genius, whom for convenience we will call Barnes, was employed by a farmer, living in a town some six or seven miles westerly from the Penobscot river, to dig a well. The soil and substratum being mostly sand, old Barnes, after having progressed downward about forty feet, found one morning, upon going out early to his work, that the well had essentially caved in, and was full nearly to the top. So, having that desire, which some men bave, of knowing what will be said of them after they are dead, and no one being yet astir, be concealed himself in a rank growth of burdocks by the side of a board fence near the month of the well, having first left his hat and frock upon the windlass over the well. At length, breakfast being ready, a boy was dispatched to call him to his meal, when lo! it was seen that Barnes was buried in the grave unconsciously dug by his own hands! The alarm being given, and the family assembled, it was decided first to eat breakfast, and then send for the coroner, the minister, and his wife and children. Such apathy did not flatter Barnes' self-esteem a bit, but he waited patiently, determined to hear what was to be said, and see what was to be seen.

Presently, all parties arrived, and began "prospecting" the scene of the catastrophe, as people usually do in such cases. At length, they drew together, to exchange opinions as to what should be done. The Minister at once gave up his opinion that The they had better level up the well, and let Barnes remain: " for," said he, "he is now beyond the temptation to sin; and in the day of judgment, it will make no difference whether he is buried five feet under the ground, or fifty, for he is bound to come forth in either case." The Coroner likewise agreed that "it would be a needless expense to his family or the town to disinter him, when he was so effectually buried," and therefore entirely coincided Try with the Minister. His wife thought that ms "he had left his hat and frock, it would be hardly worth while to dig him out for the rest of his clothes;" and so it was settled to let him remain.

shades of evening stole over the landscape; then he quietly decamped to parts unknown. After remaining incognito for about three years, one morning he suddenly appeared (hatless and frockless as he went) at the door of the farmer for whom he had agreed to dig the unfortunate well. To say that an avalanche of questions were rained upon him as to his mysterious rethe new or the exercisent which the obmly presence created. But the old man Price, $1 per Bottle, or Six for $5 Delivered to bore it all quietly, and at length informed them, that, on finding himself buried. he waited for them to dig him out, until his nationce was exhausted, and then be set to work to dig himself out, and only that distance and British Programme and Dealers throughout the day before had succeeded; for, his
