As near to the gates of a city he role, While the glorious sun all brilliantly glowed, The good man discovered, with eyes of desire, A mulberry tree in a bedge of wild beler; High up on a bough, might have tempted a brute, Large, glossy, and black, lrung the beautiful fruit-The curate was hungry, and thirsty to boot;

He shrunk from the theras, the he longed for the fruit; With a word he arrested his courser's keen speed, And then he stood up on the back of his steed: On the sabile he stood, while the creature kept still, And he gathered the fruit till he d taken his fill. "Sure, never," he said, "was a creature so rare!

How decile, how true, is this excellent more! See, here now I stand," and he gamed all around, "As eafe and as stendy as if on the ground; Yet how had it been, if some fellow this way Hed, dreaming on mischief, but chancel to say 'Hey He stood with his head in the mulberry tree,

And he spoke out aloud in the height of his glee; At the sound of his "Hey" the more made a path, And down went the priest in the wild brief bisch; He re nembered to that, on his thorny green bad, "Mach that well may be thought one met everly be said."

SAY AMEN !- Larkin Moore was a balf erazy, wandering, lazy fellow, who used to amuse the people in and about Newburyport with his eccentricities and music, for Larkin had a host of old songs hymns and snatches of melody, which he rendered, in a plaintive voice, to familiar airs, and entertaining crowds would gather around him. Many of these songs needed only to be clothed in better words, and they would take their places among the verses that men "would not willingly let die." For example, one of Larkin's songs eaught the ear of a true poet, who dressed it up, and it now commences:

"A Filgrim climbed the mountain height, Assailed by storm and sanw."

Larkin went to church one Sunday while at Taunton, and parson Whitney was exercising his gifts, which were few and small His sermons were noted for their great length, and very little depth; for their want of thought, and the preacher's want of energy; so often times seemed as if he would come to the end, if he had but spirits enough to bring bimself to stand still. Try mand be convinced of its efficiery.

He listened longer than could have been expected of such a re restless mind as his, while hearly, secondly, thirdly, fourthly, and so on to the seventhly. were severally announced and expatiated on; and then exclaimed the minister, "what shall I say more?"

"For merey's sake," cried out Larkin, "say Amen ."

"Put that man out !" said Mr. Whitney; but he was so put out himself that he did not resume his discourse.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY .- A friend of ours, says the Philadelphia Transcript. has taken the trouble to analyze a tumbler of XX ale, and reports that he found it composed of the fullowing ingredients: Two parts putrid horse flesh, three parts hops, and the balance, two parts and a half, he could find no name for. The discovery was anything but an agreeable one to him, as he is an inordinate lover of the nut-brown beverage with its snowy foam. He thinks that during his life he has drank the carcasses of about six dead horses and enough

JACKTOWN, June 15th, 1854.
W. O. Hicker: Sin-I have one of your Improved Cider Mille; I used the Mill last October, and on trial I ground fifty bushles of apples per hour. I keep the ground apples twelve hours, and I can press out two harrels of cider per hour with two men. I can recommend your improved Cider Mill to all fruit growers, for speed and a saving of labor. I can make thirty-five gallons of cider from nine and one-half bushles common appless. The cider can be present from the pomace without using water now. Cider will keep one year when water is not used at the press.
