

ADDRESS OF THE CARRIER

"CHRONICLE."

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1859.

Another year has slipped away, and I am here again, Upon my New Year's errand, in my usual pleasant strain;

The first event I'll "pitch into" is that old pest, Hard Times, Who paid us his respects, and rid us of our hard earned times;

Our town has still pushed onward, in her usual quiet pace, Has paved in all directions, built up many a vacant space;

The great Atlantic Telegraph is wafted beneath the sea, Exactly on the spot its owners wanted it to be,

We've had a fine election, which has made some people wonder, Especially old "Ten cent Jem's," who caught peculiar thunder;

I think I'd better make a hair, or you'll call me a bore, For venting yams to you that off we're hinted at before;

For reading you weekly, through all sorts of wind and weather, Tiring out my walking pegs, and wearing out my Spanish leather;

For venting yams to you that off we're hinted at before, I've visited you weekly, through all sorts of wind and weather,

For venting yams to you that off we're hinted at before, I've visited you weekly, through all sorts of wind and weather,
