AGRICULTURAL.

CAUSE OF DISEASE .- A hungry mare hat had been accustomed to eat nothing but grass, with a young colt at her side, was fed a few quarts of corn. A painful doath soou followed. Instances are by no means rare in which death has been the certain and inevitable result of a little violent exercise ; of driving a horse a little too fast when his stomach full; of compulling a horse to perform a a long journey without rest or food, and then allowing it to have free access to an abundance of green, succulent food, in the exhausted and jaded condition in which the end of this hard journey found him; of confining in cold airy stabls when they have been accustomed to warm ones; of being shut up in foul stables, not half ventilated. and blanketed warmly, and glutted with the most nutritious food and allowed no exercise; of being exposed for hours to the peltirg and inclement sterms of winter, witu the necessary protection, after being driven' furiously. A. C. Barres & Constant

It is, doubtless, furthest from the intentions of every one to do auything, or leave it undone, which will result in injury to his animals. It is an excellent rule to see that animals are always fed and made comfortable before our own wants are supplied .-When working animals are weary they must rest. When their meal time comes they must stop and be fed, whether they have performed their accustomed task or not. In driving on the highways let rait cars, omnibusés and express vehicles leave you far in the distance. Let the impetuous roadster disdain your deliberate pace. Let Jehu (Kings ix., 20) and a retinue of a whole township pass you in their impetuosity .-They leave the highway behind them. Let dark and dreary night come on before you reach your place of destination, but let not your horses be driven beyond their natural gait.

REARING FRUIT TREES.-Many people put out fruit trees; some throw them out and into the grounb ; some stick them in, : fow set them out, and after they are set out take care of them. Some bring forth thirty fold, some sixty, and some an hundred.-Now let them who readeth do likewise.

Those who throw and stick their fruit trees into the ground, are apt to leave the care of them to the cattle and hogs, especially the pruning-consequences, deat trees, deformed trees, poor fruit, and little of itno profits.

To have trees pay expenses-to have them pleasant to look at-an ornament to the neighborhood, and a gratification to the stomach-set them out in good soil good enough to bear stout corn or any other grain. Then keep she soil good; keep them well and properly prunded yourself. not allowing cattle or hogs to assist. Much is lost in allowing too many brances to grow. Only the limbs, to form a good symmetrical top, should be allowed to grow. Too many limbs on a frit tree ar just as pernicious as too many stalks of corn in a hill-smaller

Passing along a highway a short time ago, I observed a row of trees each side of the way, to bestow an apple on the traveler.-Are there any more to do likewise, that many a poor one, who hath not of God's domain to grow an apple, can pick one to cat without trespass and without price ?-Country gentleman,

PREPARATION FOR SWARMING .- Many persons, who know better, neglect to clean their bee stands in the spring-an operation grateful to the bees and essential to a full developement of their productive powers. There is sometimes remissness, too, in preparing hives for the swarming season, resulting often in the loss of colinies, which otherwise would have sought a forest domicil. No matter what description of hive is used, it is best to have an ample number on hand to meet any possible exigency which the freaks of off-shooting colonies may chance to display. These preparation may not save all but the chances and they will, if not delayed till the moment when the outgoing coliny is about to take wing. It is a true saying that "delays are dangerous," and in nothing are they more so than with beer in the swarming season.-Rurall New Yorker.

THE POTATO BUG .- The Missouri papers announce the appearance of the Colerado potato bug in the region about St. Louis Its advent is looked upon with many misgivings, but the prevalent disposition seems to be to give the pest battle in the way most likely to preserve a portion of the potato crop from its ravages. In two or three years we may expect them here: but we hope by that time it will meet a foo that will insure its extermination.

CHERRIES are now abundant. The Ger man people make them into soup. Here's the recipe : Take a quantity of fine ripe oberries, cook them in water with sugar and a little vanille : fry some slices of bread in fresh butter, threw them into the decoction of cherries, mix well up, and serve hot.
