The death of Clarence F. Derr, on Saturday afternoon last, was received with profound sorrow by this entire community, and now the many relatives and friends deeply sympathize with the bereaved parents. Clarence was a bright young man, about 22 years of age, (the only child of Frank C. and Martha Derr), who, after graduating from the Danville High School, expressed a desire to become a banker, and how well he served his calling is only too well known by the hosts of business men and women who daily called at the Danville National Bank, where he was a favorite with every-bark. of business men and women who daily of no board the steam ship "Grosser Kurfurt;"

A STOLEN INVENTION.

How the Designer of the Hansom Cab Lost a Fortune.
Charles Hansom, the famous English architect, was a talented man in many respects other than in the exercise of his profession. He was dining on a certain day with a few friends when one of them taunted him with being unable to invent a vehicle which would supersede the old fashioned backs and cabs in universal use in London. Mr. Hansom got a sheet of paper, and Hansom got a sheet of paper, and without any delay he sketched out his without any delay he sketched out his idea of a safe and convenient mode of passing through the crowded streets of the great metropolis. His friends watched him while he was at work and unanimously applauded the sketch which he had drawn. They dubbed it by the name of its inventor, and it was then and there called a "Hansom car." One of those present advised him to take out a patent for it, which he said he would do on the morrow. However, there was one dishonest man in the company, by whom he was forestalled, for on reaching his own house that evening and being, like Mr. Hansom, company, by whom he was forestantea, for on reaching his own house that evening and being, like Mr. Hansom, a clever draftsman, as all great archi-tects are, he sketched out a car like the drawing he had seen, and early the following morning he took it to the office and got out a patent for it in
