No prima donna was ever more de-lightfully capricious, more full of mis-chief, than the famous Mme. Malibran, At the rehearsals of "Romeo and Ju-But even as he spoke the muskets got to work and rattled away so rapidit was important for Romeo to know, but all he could get was "not sure,"
"don't know," "can't tell," or "it will be just as it happens, necording to my hamor; sometimes in one place, sometimes in one place, sometimes in content of the some section."

But even as he spoke the muskets got to work and rattled away so rapidit that there seemed a score instead of half a dozen, and the colone's face lost its look of anxiety. A force of the section of the section in the colone's face lost its look of anxiety. A force of the section in the colone's face lost its look of anxiety. John Templeton, the fine old Scottish tenor, was probably never so miscrable as when he was cast to sing with Malibran. Very often she was displeased with his performance, and one evening she whispered to him, "You was not acting properly; make love to yet evening she whispered to him, "You are not acting properly; make love to me better," to which, so it is said, Templeton innocently replied, "Don't you know I am a married man?" Evidently the lady did not think there was anything serious in the circumstance, for not long afterward, when in "Somambula" she was on her knees to Templeton as Elvino, she succeeded in making the tenor scream.

Glass Windows.

Glass Windows.

Glass Windows.

Glass Windows are known to have existed at Ponpell as early as A. D. 70. In the third century the windows of royal houses throughout Europe were glazed. Windows of colored glass were placed in many French and Italian churches in 674, and the use of glass became general in private houses during the twelful century. The panes, however, were only three or four inches square, and the material was so inferior that, while a room was lighted, it was often a matter of some difficulty to discern objects on the outside through the glass. For a long time windows in England were a subject of taxation.

7im Dandies

Ninth infantry, who were six spick and span fellows, who always looked fresh and clean and presentable, and they were always detailed for the best head-quarters posts. This caused jealousy, and it was natural that by and by a story should get adoat that the six recruits were fellows without sand. It could be truthfully said that their courage had not been tested, as the Indians had been quiet for a long time, but no one argued thus. It was easier to go with the majority and say with some of the old veterans:

"You just mark my words. If we ever get into a brush with the reds it will take four men apiece to hold these dudes on the firing line."

The Jim Dandies were attracted to each other and formed a coteric. They organized a glee club, sang love songs, read popular novels and bought toilet soap. They even wore linen collars, and it was said of at least three of them that they rubbed their faces with bay rum after a shave. The Jims were guyed and ridiculed, but they went their way and bided their time.

They had put in a year of this when the call came for the Ninth to take the field. The red men had grown tired of peace and wanted war again,

"Now keep your eyes on our Jim Dandies," said the veterans to each other as they went marching away." If we buck up ag'in the Sioux you'll see six sissy men fainting away to be chucked into the ambulance."

The Ninth went out for business and found it. On the third day after leaving the fort it found a big force of Indians in its front, and the fight was hot from the beginning. The reds had the advantage of numbers, and by and by they began to work around on the left flank of the command. The colonel saw it, but he could spare only a few men to checkmate the move. They must get into the broken ground and die fighting. It was a military necessity that a small force, should be sent, but he hesitated to issue the order, and finally called for a sergeant to lead a finally called for a sergeant to lead a sergeant as they stepped out. "It's going to take old veterans to hold that ground, and these are only dudes."

"Give us a chance, colonel," appealed one of the Jims.

The seven men took open order and double quicked across the open into cover, and the six Jims sang as they went. The colonel looked blank, and 500 men laughed, and the Indians almost ceased their fire as they wondered want was up.

"Now, dudes," said the sergeant as they reached cover, 'this is no making love to a red headed girl on the veranda of a summer hotel. We've got to hold them injuns off this flank if we die trying. You've got a chance to show what you're made of, and durn my buttons if I don't plug the first man who looks to the rear!"

For answer the Jims sang a verse of a ware ballad and then dropped down just as the Indian bullets began to sing about them. The sergeant cursed and muttered, and over on the line, half a mile away, the major said to the colonia as the singing reached their ears: "Did you ever know the like of that' I'm afraid this ministre! show business will end in our being flanked."

But even as he spoke the muskets got to work and rattled away so rapidly that there seemed a score instead of half a dozen, and the colonel's face.

the half dozen, but they could not get nearer than a certain line. There was an open space to cross, and every redskin who tried it was tumbled on his face. When there was shooting to do, the Jims buckled down to it. When there came a luli, one of them would strike up a song, and the others would join in the chorus. The serg-ant sought to hush them, saying that songs did not belong to Upton's tactles, but they sang the louder and sang him down. The Ninth had got itself into a hole. It was not strong enough to drive the

The matter was that a company was being withdrawn to re-enforce the right, but the movement caused uneasiness and a stackening of the fire. Menwere beginning to look to the rear and breathe heavily and the indians to utter whoops of exultation and make ready for a rush when the six Jim Dandles, who were temporarily out of it, leaped up on the rocks and began to sing a topical song. It was new to most of their comrades, and the jolly air caught on at oace and started most of their comrades, and the folly air caught on at once and started cheers all along the line. Two hundred men joined in the chorus, and they were singing yet as the colonel perfected his plans and ordered a forward movement. There was a grand charge and a rout, and the Ninth had not only extricated itself, but won a victory to be proud of.

"Splendid move of yours, colone," said the major when the fight had been won.

Curious Laws That Prevailed in the Plorentiae Republic.

The Florentine republic and a unique metsod of dealing with its too ardent democrats. In 1293 the state passed the famous "Magna Charta of Florence," to curb the cruelty and rapacity of the lawless nobles, who, in defiance of the law courts, were accustomed to flog and torture their dependents at will. The act practically disfranchised these titled harpies by a clause which excluded them from the signory—abody in the state corresponding to the British cabinet—unless they renounced their nobility.

This curious provision prepared the way for a still more extraordinary clause, which enacted that any member of the democratic party who made immedi olnoxious to the government and was by them declared to be "guilty of treason to the commonwealth" should be given a patent of nobility and thus at the same moment be raised in the social scale and reduced to a political nobody at the will of the state.—London Telegraph.

A Doctor's Story.

At a recent meeting of a woman's club a physician who gave a lecture on tuberculosis told the following story:

"One day a woman who was suffering from tuberculosis was brought to my attention, and, as we could not get her away from her work for a rest in the country. I did the next best thinggave her directions about ventilation, etc., and prescribed a tonic to build her up. I did not see her again for nearly a month, and I was greatly surprised to find her exactly as thin as ever. In fact, she weighed several pounds less than at the time I first saw her.

"You haven't been taking the tonic regularly." I said.

path from his place down to the trail on the other side."

Lady Kitty did not answer. Her lips were half parted, and she looked off at the distant foothills dreamly. England seemed more than half a world away. So did the major and the others. A curious sense of delicious peril-possessed her. It was the first time in her life that she had not felt sure of herself so far as a man was concerned. Just now she had a wild, joyous belief that if this westerner were to ask her to be his wife she would say "Yes." She wondered if he would.

Charity of Former Kings. Charity of Former Kings.

Henry II. sought peace for his soul after the murder of Becket by feeding and sustaining 10,000 people daily, a proceeding that must have made many a man rejoice in the fall of the "proud prelate." Quaintest of all, though, was the charity of Henry III., who commanded that "in the great hall at Winsore, at a good fire, all the poor and needy children that could be found wars to he fed. according to the weight needy children that could be found were to be fed, according to the weight and measure of the king's children," a queer variant of the more modern system of distributing the Maundy money. It is to be feared that nowadays, says the London Chronicle, the amount of food equivalent to "the weight and measure of the king's children" would not go far in relieving "all the poor and heedy children that could be found."
