SENSITIVENESS

AT Bridgeport, Conn., on the 1st inst., a young man named Joseph Barrett was bound over to the superior court on a charge of man slaughter in causing the death of Lillian Barbner, a fourteen-year-old girl by drowning on the 19th of July The accusation was that Barret abandoned the girl in deep wate while bathing at Seaside park. Th circumstances are not stated in th press dispatch; but it is presumed tha Barrett could swim and might hav saved the child by the exercise of proper courage.

For a long time past, the commo law has imposed upon the bystander the obligation of preventing crime of accident and refused to overlook any dereliction on his part in the way of failare to do a man's part in an emergency. Modern conditions, how ever, have relaxed the strictness of the law's requirements and, to a cer tain extent, dulled the edge of the popular conscience and lightened the sanctions of the law respecting the negligent bystander's liability. The Nineteenth century closed with a r. action from earlier moral enthusiasm and a frank avowal in many quarter of the rights of individual selfishness

We note the Bridgeport incident a an encouraging sign-we are glad i is one of many-that the Twentietl century is opening with a higher and more altruistic sense of personal obligation than has prevailed in recen We of course do not presum to pass upon the guilt or innocence of young Barrett, whose arrest may have been, for aught we know, wholly without justification; but the arrest of a man for failing to rescue a young girl from drowning is, aside from thi doubt, a hopeful sign.

We are in an age of government by public opinion. It is a wholeson public opinion which denies the righ of a man to act a selfish or cowardl part or to do as he selfishly please with his own; which recognizes and imposes the obligation to be courage ous and helpful to others, even at the risk of life and limb.

WE ARE TRUSTED MORE

A visit to one of our progressive business friends at the National Capitol, disclosed to us his apprecia tion for the value of the country weekly, when we beheld many differ ent publications upon his desk and about his office, the greater number of which were small, country weekl newspapers. He took them for ger eral information, he said, and declar ed that the truly representative coun try press, the village weeklies, con closer to the lives of their readers serve more of their immediate person al interests, and serve them, on the whole, better, and actually have part in the lives of more people th whole country over, than all of the great metropolitan sheets together They serve the interests of their con stituents better simply because they tell the day-by-day story of life as i ac utlly is around them. They are not hunting for sensations, they ar not pandering to jaded appetites long sated with yellow literature. have not lost the sense of the eterna fitness of things, of news proportion and the relative importance of me and events, that is so characteristic of the big city press. AT this time when the dog ques-tion is so largely occupying the columns of the various peiodicals, our rural friends unite in declaring the town dogs a nuisance, inasmuch as they are not only a dangerous pest to have running at large in our midst, but that they have become a menace to game of all kinds and a constant struction to farmers' crops and their domestic fowels.

The half-starved curs and others of the hunting variety, that are more or less of a roaming nature, wander far into the country, remaining for days and live upon whatever may chance to become their prey.

One of our good, industrious rural friends informs us that he is less about forty of his fine young turkeys through the prowlings and ravages of these worthless or otherwise neglected

We are a friend of the dog, and would not advise brutal treatment to be thrust upon him through the lack of attention in his master, but the local government is entirely too easy in allowing the borough to be overrun by worthless and unclaimed, at least no taxed, animals,

If the law is to be enforced, see that ALL DOGS are included, and not only those belonging to the more law-abiding classes.

Imbedded in the cement forming the steps as well as on the platform above and on the walk below are a large number of pennies, old fashion-ed copper coins as well as modern-looking pennies recently coined. While these are securely embedded in the cenent one side, flush with the surface is of course exposed and it is herein that the novelty lies.
