the school comes as a relief. It is a chance to get the children away from home for a few hours each day that they may not disturb. The school is treated as a partial substitute for the home. The burdens are shifted. The child is made to feel that the school is half-punishment and an offset to the freedom he has enjoyed during the summer. #### PREPARING THE WAY.

THE political quietude has been somewhat agitated by our local politicians, and there promises to be not a little excitement later on. Of course the majority of the offices will be filled by Democrats, and it is quite possible that all may easily win, although this is improbable when we consider the ifs.

If our candidates hide themselves in the woods and fear to ventur forth; if they follow out the lines laid out for them by the ill-informed; if they proceed their courses with ne nes or forethought, or if the expect to go it alone on their own popularity, how easy it would be for the active candidate of the opposi-

But we do not believe that a single one of our corps of candidates propose to adopt any one of these ifs, and will carefully prepare and manag the affair to better results.

Slyly the more shrewd are no measuring their way and endeavoring to mend up the little differences that may exist, preparatory to the plung that may mean life or death to ther in the coming campaign.

That is right; we need our every friend, whether it be in our social, business or political life. Not only is it necessary to have our friends support, but is it not wise and more

Those who argue thus forget that the element of power in the hands of the politician is money and that the money comes from the corporations. Thus the real political boss is the head of a great corporation. For instance, is not the president of a railroad, as railroads are now run, a far more potent factor politically than the same man would be if he were a government employee, especially if he were elected instead of being appointed to his position? Big questions confront the people of this age and they must be decided by the common people. They require careful thought and much discussion. The organized farmers are talking them over in the grange. It is to be feared that the ur organized farmers are

SCHOOLS AND THE HOME.

No Danville and many other cities the school year has opened. All public schools in the United States will reopen during the month. Millions of young Americans will march daily to public or private schools or to college and universities—all in quest of learning, culture, development, power.

In too many homes the opening of the school comes as a relief. It is a Typer of the school to the fact that in conforming strictly to the excise law the Subway Trayers lost opnortunities for further.

The burdens are shifted. The child is made to feel that the school is half-punishment and an offset to the freedom he has enjoyed during the summer. The parent accepts the school as a place where all the duties and responsibilities of parenthood may be unloaded.

But the discerning teacher in the school knows very well that 'this is unjust to the child and to the school. She also is able to tell something of the character of the home whence comes the pupil. She can point her finger to more than one unfortunate in her care and avow with conditions. -All honor to the editor of the

Kept In Stock.

"No first class metropolitan hotel is thoroughly equipped until it possesses in assortment of flags almost as complete as that of an admiral's flagship," remarked the manager of a prominent caravansary.

ness for pretty girls. He made love to all fate threw in his way. Naturally he made love to Joe. Naturally also he made her love him. He was the man of her dreams, in every way the opposite of Ransom and very unlike any of the farmer lads or callow city youngsters with whom she had been brought in contact. But because she loved Billy with whom she had been brought his chapted at him, made a pretense of quarreling and so kept him puzzled as to her frame of mind. Puzzling over a very pretty girl is bad for the affections if the puzzler wishes to escape free, but Billy did not know that in time. He tried all a man might to read this maiden riddle. He had been quite fair, the thought—had told her in the outset he couldn't afford to marry until he was gray and bald.

"I've nothing in the world now but myself," he had said, "And, though space rates give a decentish living for myself," he had said, "And, though space rates give a decentish living for one, it's little short of criminal undertaking to make them furnish rations for two." Then straightway he had made Joe guide him to the deepest pool of the trout brook and stay with him at the stream side all through a summer morning. In course of the talk there she had samehow gathered that a long time ahead when certain lives and leases lanced Billy would have a sung long time ahead when certain lives and leases lapsed Billy would have a sung maintenance. Possibly the information had its weight. Possibly also it went over her head. Certainly, when in the sixth week of Billy's stay at the farmhouse Ransom was pleased to grow furiously jenious of him, Joe decided something must be done—and did it, "Did you know there was a wedding coming off Sunday?" she asked of Billy Thursday at noon. Billy pulled out penedl and notebook, putting on his most professional air as he asked: "Will you give me the names of the "Will you give me the names of the victims, please, Miss Greer? Also any other particulars of interest?"

"No! Go ask the preacher," Joe said, smilling mysteriously.

Billy went, but came back more than ever mystified. "The wedding is a fact," he said, "but a solitary fact. Brother Jones knows no more than we do—only that he has been asked to hold himself in readiness at the close of the morning service. Furthermore, he says you asked him. Confess, young lady. You are getting up a fine hoax."
"See if I am," Joe retorted, her head higher than common. She ran off almost instantly and was well nigh unappreachable throughout the next two days. But Saturday evening she walked with Billy all up and down the yard, the moon shedding silver flects upon them, the roses in the garden filing the air with perfume. As they walked Billy held her hand, and insensibly, it reemed, she drooped toward him. Nother said very much. As the clock struck 10 Joe drew away from him with a little shudder, saying very low, "Maybe this is our last walk together." But Billy, quite beyond prudence, fluig his arms about her and kissed her full on the mouth, saying thickly, "It shall not be—I want yon—always." He slept little that night, but fell into a heavy doze at daylight. It lasted un-
