The Way Liquor Was Smuggled Aboard One of Our Warships. While on the China station in 1883 the master at arms' mess on the United States steamer Omaha was in a drunken and demoralized condition for several weeks. Try as he might the captain could not discover where the liquor was coming from. Finally all shore liberty was stopped, but the drunkenness did not cease. On the morning of salling while the executive officer was near the port gangway watching the taking in of stores he asked what was in a large demijoin that came over the side with boxes and packages. He was told that it was vinegar. He pulled the cork and snifted it. It was vinegar. Then his attention was attracted by the tag marked 'master at arms' mess,' and, remarking that the mess must be using vinegar for bathing, as he had already seen the same demijohn brought aboard twice within that week, he ordered the officer of the deck to inspect it carefully and taste it. He did; it was vinegar. That officer, however, noticed that the jug had an unusually long neck. He poured out a small quantity of vinegar and discovered an extra cork in the bottom of the neck. Below that were three gallons of gin. The vinegar between the corks had served to deceive the inspecting officer at the gangway for a month.—Chicago News.

How Fishes Talk.

Fishes undoubtedly communicate with their fellows. Even if they cannot "talk," they have other means or communication that are better adapted to their needs. We know how readily fishes recognize their mates and how quickly broading fishes repel intruders of their own or other species. Something besides seeing them—perhaps some sense of which we have no conception—may do this. Many fishes communicate with their fellows by means of sounds produced through the medium of their air bladders, by grinding their teeth together and in various other ways.

The sense of touch is highly developed in many fishes and doubtless en-

Colonel Hayes Had an Answer Ready

Of Colonel John C. Hayes, who

in his "Gold Hunters of California."
Hayes, with his command, had been out scouting. On his return he made no report to General Scott who sent for him, General Scott was a veritable martinet in enforcing military discipline. After Hayes was seated in the commander's headquarters Scott said,
"Colonel Hayes, I have received no re

Hayes began by saying that he struc the padre's trail on a certain day, fol-lowed it for two days, and on the third day, while his command was resting a noon and taking their siesta, the o padre came down on them. The "boys gathered themselves together and whip ped the Mexicans off, killing quite number of the padre's command. Hown loss was insignificant—one kille own loss was insignificant—one killed and three wounded. "Surprised you, ch?" queried Scott, "Yes; we were not expecting him." "Where were your pickets?" "Did not have any." "What!" shouted General Scott. "A colonel in the regular army of the United States go into camp in the heart of the enemy's country and never place a picket on guard? What would you do if surprised when asleep?" "Shoot the first man that waked me up;" was the cool reply.

"This is a puzzle tankard," said the antiquary. "Try it."

The tankard, of peculiar shape, with odd little spouts protruding from it in unexpected places, was made of blue glazed ware, and on it was scratched the starce.

He stanza:

From Mother Earth
I claim my birth;
I'm made a joke for man.
But now I'm here,
Filled with good cheer,
Come taste me if you can.
The old man filled the vessel with

Come taste me if you can.
The old man filled the vessel with fair water, and the youth tried to drink from it. He could not, though, succeed. To whatever spout he put his lips the water refused to flow from that opening, flowing from half a dozen other, once instead all over his face and neck. "That's enough for me," he said. "This puzzle tankard," said the antiquary, "dates back to the seventeenth entury. Every tavern had one in those days. The landlord would fill it with ale or sack or beer, and if you could empty it down your throat you got your drink for nothing. Otherwise you must stand treat. Many a seventeenth century laugh these puzzle tankards must have caused.

"It was, you know, quite impossible, unaided, to solve a tankard's secret. The secret of this tankard of mine is to place your little finger over the further spout, your thumb over that one and your left hand thumb over the bulb. Now you can drink, you see, from the small underspout in comfort,"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The following tasty inscription is from a family mausoleum erected by a Welsh landowner and magistrate in Merlonethshire. To expend turf winnings on creeting a tomb looks at first sight eccentrie, but possibly the builder was moved by the reflection that betting has brought many to their graves:

DOLLAR WILL DO IT

A man who does not take care of his money assumes the risk of sooner or later being in a position where he will not have any to take care of. It is no hardship to put away a small portion of your earnings weekly, or monthly, and while it can always be called upon, it is out of the way of "dribbling
