to dinner at noon and to remember not to cross the Johnsons' pasture, where rattlesnakes had been seen recently.

Barbara went briskly toward the woods with a feeling that on such a day it was indeed good to be alive well down the road she passed the great arched gateway of the sanitarium, and, looking up the steep drive way, she could see the buildings perched on the hill. She had not been flowr, this road for ten years, but sha such denly remembered, with a little theill of pity for its immates, that the red brick building on the extreme left was the insane pavillon.

She took the little footpath which led across the lower end of the sanitarium grounds and into the pin woods. She found a place where gian pines towered many feet skyward and the ground was covered thickly with pine needles. Here she sat down and listened for a time to the tinkle of tiny brook hard by and the sighing on the breeze through the pine tops.
