The God In the Hurdy Gurdy

By CASPAR JOHNSON

Copyright, 1905, by K. A. Whitehead

It was a narrow alley, running between the back yards. It was intended for the convenience of the futcher's boy and the grocer's boy and the ash man. Distinctively it was not intended for men of Pasquale Venetit's stamp. Indeed, a sign at either end announced this in no uncertain terms.

"Beggars, Peddlers and Street Musicians Keep Out," it read.
But to Fasquale Venetti warning

Boggars, reduces and street Musi-cians Keep Out," It read.

But to Fasquale Venetti warning signs in English had no terrors from the simple fact that written English was beyond his ken. Therefore as he came trundling the ancient hurdy gurdy up the street he looked into the alley, saw its possibilities—the case with which coins could be tossed from the back windows—and, forsaking the as-phait pavements, where, to use his own expression, he could "no getta de biz," he turned into the alley and, un-limbering his musical battery, sent up.

Immoring his musical battery, sent up the quavering strains of "Lindy, Lin-dy, Yo' Is Ma Ladylove."

It is a hard, cold world. Pasquale ground away patiently, and whenever a face appeared at any of the win-dows be spilled avanalizely. The proposed down be spilled avanalizely removed. his battered hat and bowed profoundly and even essayed a joyful shuffling of his feet while he turned the crank. But, despite all these blandishments, to say nothing of the appeal made by a choice assortment of selections, ranging from the classic to raginne, no coins wrapped in white paper came flingling to his feet. To be sure, one fat cook came out to the back gate and after he had played half through the hurdy gurdy's assortment gave him a arter he mai payed nair through the burdy gurdy's assortment gave him a penny, and an old gentleman had raised an upper window and, with a thundered "Get out of this!" had flung him a dime. But 11 cents from such a promisting alley! Pasquale resented his ill treatment and moved farther up the alley.

He moved to the far end of the allegath a view to quitting it. He made one final stand, however, before the bick of an imposing house. With a staking heart he sent up the jerky bars of a march from a popular light opera. The house, like all the others, was unresponsive. Then he shifted to ragtime. He decided to play through his repertory anyway. If it falled, he would go back to the asphalt pavements and try his luck somewhere downtown before a restaurant or a promising saloon.

Now, it happened that in the big, dim back parlor of the imposing house sat
two young people, and a single glance showed that they were not happy.

The man sat very stiff and straight in his chair and bit his lips. The girl was seated on a low divan. Her face was flushed and her eyes glowed angrify.

"It is far too much to forgive this time," she was saying. "I have forgiven and forgiven-eternally forgiven—and now I am tired." The man replied coldly

The man replied coldly.

"Perhaps you are right," he said in a strained voice.

"And the sooner it's over the better, now," said the girl, choking.

The man started up. Whatever remostrance he was about to make he stifled.

"Year, wall," he right. "Very well," he said curtly.

The girl pulled a ring from her finger and laid it on the table beside the man. He took it without a word and "I might say"— he began slowly.

"All you could say would make no difference," she said wearily.
The man rose and strode to the window. Pasquale was grinding away assiduously. At the sight of the man in the window he smirked and bowed and shuffled his feet. The man smiled bitterly.

"Lucky, happy devil!" he muttered.

Then he turned to the girl and drew

Then he turned to the girl and drew himself up stiffly.
"I may as well say goodby," said he. She made no reply.
"Goodby," he said again.
"Goodby," she returned evenly.

The orgy was soon over, however, for a patrolman came down the alley and seized the exuberant musician. The thought of the yellow coin in his pocket enabled Pasquale to bear this ordeal with equanhity.

"Alla right, alla right," he protested mildly as he was husded past the warning signs and dumped unceremoniously on the asphalt pavement.

a year for the purpose of obtaining a pass to Baltimore. The man and his farmly had served the senator when he was first making his way up the ladder of politics, and as a result of this he always obliged him, and had, moreover, a soft place in his heart for the man. He obtained for him a position in one of the departments at Washing ton; but this did not seem to be enough, for regularly at the end of each six months he applied for his ticket to Baltimore. One day he sickened and was reported to be dying. The senator, very much grieved, immediately called upon him.

"Joe," he said, leaning over anything I can do for you?"

The sick man looked up with a flash of recognition, and instantly replied in a whisper:
