THE "HOLY HOUSE."

The Most Perfect Method Is Also the Most Expensive. Telephone poles nearly always decay at or just below the ground line. The upper portion of the pole, permanently in the air, rapidly drying after rain, is practically always dry and is rarely found decayed. The butt of the pole, found decayed. The butt of the pole, deeply buried in the ground, is in a permanently damp condition, but oxygen being excluded it is seldom badly affected. Close to the ground line the soil retains the moisture and keeps the wood constantly damp where it is exposed to the air and to the heat of the sun, which is just what its little vegetable enemies like, but if the albumen in the wood can be rendered unit for food the wood-tissues offer practically no support to fung! Timber preserva-food the wood tissues offer practically no support to fungi. Timber preservation amounts, then, to poisoning the food supply of the destructive agencies.

Preservation of timber is attempted in three ways—by seasoning, either natural of artificial; by outward mechanical means, such as charrien in fire or the applications of antiseptics on the surface of the stick, and by impregnating the wood with antiseptics. Of these the last is by far the most important. The most perfect method-which is also the most expensive—is the injection of dead oil of coal tar into the whole fiber of the pole.—Hartford Times.

THE "HOLY HOUSE."

Legend of the Home of Mary and the Savious.

Let me give the main outlines of the legend. At Nazareth was preserved with plous care the house of Our Lady. The dwelling place in which she received the gracious message of the incarnation, the lowly home which sheltered the holy family for so many years, was a very precious sanctuary. On May 10, 1201, a month after the taking of Tripoil and Ptolemais, this holy house was carried by the hands of angels from Nazareth to a place in Dalmatia between Flume and Tersats on the Adriatic shore.

on the Adriatic shore.

It was a one roomed edifice, built of It was a one roomed edifice, built of red square stones, fastened with coment, and bore proof of age and oriental design. It stood without any foundations and had a wooden decorated ceiling. The walls were covered with frescoes; there were a door and a narrow window; inside were an altar of stone, an ancient crucifix, a small cubpoard, containing a few vessels of common use; a chimney and hearth, above which was a cedar statue of Our Lady with the Holy Child in her arms. The pastor of the place learned in a vision that the building was the house of Our Lady, the stone altar that at which St. Peter celebrated mass and the statue the stone altar that at which St. Peter celebrated mass and the states the work of St. Luke the Evangelist. In proof of the vision he was cured of a serious illness. A deputation of four responsible persons forthwith were sent to Nazareth to investigate the mystery, and they found that the house was no longer to be found. Measurement and other means taken proved that the house that had suddenly appeared in Dalmatia was indeed none other than that which had as suddenly left Palestine. Three years after, on Dec. 10, 1204, the holy house again disappeard and under the pontificate of Celestine V. came to Recanati, a little town in the march of Ancona, when it fixed itself in a laurel grove belonging to a plous lady called Loreto. It was discovered by some shepherds and soon became recognized and was henceforth a much frequented place of pligrimage. Eight months afterward the house removed to a small hill, three miles from Recanati, to land belonging to two brothers, who, however, fell out shortly afterward over the division of wealth which began to flow to the new shrine. To save strifts between the brothers the house was suddenly lifted once more and this time settled down finally in the midst of the public way, ly in the midst of the public way, which had to be diverted in consewhich had to be diverted in consequence. Here, too, in the course of time a chapel was built, which gave way in time to the present basilica. The famous pilgrimage of Loreto goes on today. Popes, kings and princes have visited this shrine and left great gifts. Later on a festival with liturgical rites was instituted, and in time the feast of the translation of the holy house was extended to many countries.—Fortnightly Review.

Harry Lee, but in vain. He had his eyes on it in no time.

Just at this juncture a girl of eighteen, dressed in mourning and looking tearful and anxious, wanted help. Her trunk was all right as to handles, but she was afraid it had been checked to Rochester instead of Syracuse. She gave the bachelor her check to see about it, and thus it came about that he had three checks for three trunks in his possession. Moreover, he put them into the same pocket. Moreover, again, he'd have walked back to Miss Remigton with them had not the plain ington with them had not the plain looking woman and the girl in mourn-ing hesitatingly reminded him of his

"But, man, I surely checked it, and you saw me hand her the brass. Those confounded railroad folks must have made another of their stupid mistakes."

"Well, we'll let it rest for a day, and perhaps they'll rectify it."

During the next twenty-four hours Miss Remington sent two more telegrams from Buffalo, and the ease loving and complacent bachelor got a move on him and went to the depot to interview the president, vice president interview the president, vice president and general manager of the road. Being told that they had gone off on a cific; his "collects" were vigorous and rather threatening. At the end of the day he decided on making a personal trip to straighten out the tangle. He could remember the trunks and their respective owners.

His first stop was at Syracuse. He was sure that the girl in mourning with a humble looking trunk had had it with a humble looking trunk had had it checked there. Two telegrams had passed and he had her address. In the course of an hour he found her. She hadn't quite so much mourning on now and was better looking than he had thought. She had received the plain woman's trunk with the broken handle. She was a refined, ladylike girl and in mourning for an aunt who had left her $50,000, but yet she used language tinged with acid. Next time she went traveling and had to appeal to a man traveling and had to appeal to a man for help she would make sure that he knew enough to check his own trunk, and so forth, and so forth. Mr. Lee got away with his ears burning, and yet he admired Miss Strothers. He arranged to have the trunk sent on to Rochester and then took the train for that city. The plain woman was expecting him. She had the trunk all ready to point at, but it didn't happen to be Miss Strothers' trunk. It belonged to Miss Remington. Here was another mixup.

The bachelor drew a long breath and started to explain, but was cut short after a minute. He was asked to identify himself as an honest man; he was asked to prove that he was not a baggage thief; he was asked to convince the plain looking woman, who looked plainer than ever in her own house and with her anger up, that his looked plainer than ever in her own house and with her anger up, that his grandfather had never been hung for a capital crime.

At the end of half an hour the plain woman soften on him a bit. She softened enough to say that perhaps after all it was his first crime and that if he hustled around and got that one handled trunk in Rochester inside of two hours she would not call in the police.

Bachelor Lee longed to return to New York and find rest and peace, but inex-orable fate drove him on to Buffalo. There he found Miss Remington.
"I am not going to blame you at all,"
she said as she met him. "It was all she said as she met him. "It was all my fault in thinking that you knew anything about the operation of railroads. You could have loaded that trunk into an auto and had it into the Staten Island ferry in half an hour. Mr. Lee proceeded to explain, but it was not much of an explanation. However, the more he explained and the more he failed to explain the more he became interested in Miss Remington. It was a matter of four days before the big trunk; the little trunk and the one handled trunk reached their reone handled trunk reached their re one handled trunk reached their respective owners.

The chapter was closed then and there with the piain looking woman, but not so with one of the others. Ever since that date, and particularly during the last three months, the bachelor club man has found it necessary to go up the road to talk trunk business, and he finds that the most effective way to Ind Miss Remington of her duty ward the diamond ring she wears is to suggest that he take a trip to Syrac to see the other young woman abou
