that they seem to have reached that point where they think they can throw off all restraint. They must learn, however, that we have still a Government whose laws must be respected by all.

No Misunderstanding.

We noticed, on two or three occasions, during the canvass just closed, the announcement of sentiments of accord with those of the President cn some of the subjects of difference between him and the people, by some of our speakers .-For instance, we heard it assumed that Congress had no more power over the question. of sufferage in the Southern States, than it had on the same subject in Pennsylvnia. Having had some difference with some of our friends on the subjects connected with the reconstruction question, during the last winter and Summer, we had no desire to renew the con troversy during the canvass, nor do we wish now to challenge controversy ; neverthcless we deem it best to discent from the position that Congress has exhausted its power in the production of the constitutional amendment. Far. otherwise The Amendment was passed under t' conviction that its adoption was necessary, as a measure of caution, of safety .-And we have a right to suppose that, had it been accepted by the President as a compromise which he had induced them to believe would have been the case, they would then have made arrangements to dmit the loyal members as soon as possible. Indeed, a bill was reported providing that as soon as any State should adopt the amendment her loyal representatives should be admitted to their seats But it is worthy of remark that, as soon made up his mind to oppose the amendment they declined to pass the bill ; leaving the whole matter open. Should the amendment be accepted by the South, as it will be adopted by the North, and should the Southern people manifest a loyal feeling and an ability and determination to maintain loyal State governments, there is no doubt but that Congress will meet that improved state of feeling and security by liberal action o their part. But should the reverse be the case-should the South reject the Constitutional Amendment-repeat their Memphis and New Orleans' riots, and in every other way by which the disposition and capabilities of a people are mani-fested—show to the world their entire unfitness for self governmet, then, if we mistake not, Congress stands ready, backed now, as it is, by the overwhelming voice of the loyal people, to apply whatever measures are deemed necessary to secure peace, security and liberty throughout the length and breadth of the land ; even to impartial sufferage backed up by confiscation, or, if necessary, extermi

But our Conservative friends tell us that Congress has no right to prescribe the qualifications of voters in Pennsylvania. And from this they ask us to infer that it has no right to interfere with this question in Virginia or South Car-oina. This mode of reasoning they get from the Preisdent himself; and this, ol. A. Lowry, L.C. Redick too, in the face of the fact that he did himself prescribe the qualifications of electors in all the Southern States. Not only so, but he prescribed other conditions entirely inconsistant with the sovereign attributes which the Conservatives would fain have us recognize as 'continuous' in these rebel communities. It is not as sovereign States in the
