Transplanting Fruit & Other Trees.

Mr. Fross:—This is a department of terra-culture in which very few who have not the advantage of a practical education, excel. One chief obstacle in the way of success, and probably, which more than any, or all other causes combined, renders abortive the efforts and hopes of the tyro, is to be found in the imperfect manner of preparing the holes for the reception of the trees. Forest trees require of course, larger excavation than fruit trees, which are generally of more deminutive size, and set in better soil. To illustrate the necessity of giving the roots ample "scope and verge enough," we present in this paper, the experiments made by M. Chalcomesa, a French author of discrimination, and whose zeal in this department of horticulture science, has secured to him the respect of all who are familiar with his efforts and their results:

Four peach trees, resembling either as to size and vigor of growth as much as possible, were planted. No. 1 in a hole three feet square; No. 2 in a hole two feet square, and No. 3 and 4 in holes eighteen inches square. The soil and exposition similar. No. 1 has every year given the most abundant crops, and the relative size of the trees are as follows: the stem of No. 1, 18 feet high and 8 inches in circumference; that of No. 2, 9 feet high and 5 1/2 inches in circumference; No. 3, 6 feet high and 5 inches 8 lines in circumference; No. 4, 5 1/2 feet and 8 inches in circumference.

It may be well to remark that trees and plants derive their aliment from the soil in a state of solution, and this effected through the agency of the minute terminal points or spongy-veles of the roots. These are almost microscopical in their tiny and indeed are so fragile that they can only permeate the finest and most perfectly favorable soil. And obstruction in the form of stone, consolidated mass of earth, or other obstacles, operates to direct them, and consequently to prevent the supplying their proportional share of nourishment to the trees. They are in many respects strictly analogous to the vessels of the human system, and comparatively possess all the fragility and minuteness of organization which characterize the latter. It will hence be seen that exposure or unnecessary drying of the roots, previous to their transplantation and subsequent to their removal to the nursery, must be, of necessity, highly detrimental and injurious to their health. On the same account all harsh stamping and crowding while transplanting is to be avoided, as it endangers these organs, which are so essential to the health and increment of the tree.

In "Kenrick's Orchardist," a work, by the way, which should be in the hands of every young farmer, in the land, we have the following in relation to the circulation of the sap. "These enumerable mouths, or spongy-veles, absorb and drink in without discrimination, all the fluid substances which come in their way. These fluids ascend through the albumen or sap-wood to the leaves, which are true laboratories of all plants as well as the organs of respiration. The circulation of the sap, which commences its movements, first in the branches, and last of all in the roots, is produced by the attraction of the leaf buds and leaves, which are developed by the warmth of spring; their transpiration requiring supplies so great and continual that some plants are stated to perspire even twice their weight in twenty-four hours. The true sap thus generated in the leaves, and separated from the more watery particles, descends through the inner bark, having now acquired new powers, and being now peculiarly prepared to nourish and give vigor to the fruit; and continuing its descent, in disposition in its course the cambium or mucilaginous substance, by which new and successive layers of wood and bark are annually added to the tree; while whatever is not adapted as aliment to the peculiar wants of the plant, is again returned by the roots to the earth."

Another very important matter to be attended to in transplanting fruit trees, and one which we are sorry to perceive is very often neglected, is to keep down the weeds around the trunk. When a good orchard is desirable, one that will progress rapidly to maturity, it will be well to keep the soil under careful cultivation with weeded crops avoiding of course, in the routine, all such vegetables as will shade the soil too much, and preferring, as a general practice, those which are called pivoting crops—such as turnips, beets, parsnips, carrots, &c.—and seeing that the fertility is kept up, or on the increase, by copious application of the best manure.—After the removal of the crops in the fall, the surface should be carefully cleaned of all spurious vegetation, and plowed, but not harrowed, as the rougher it is left the more efficiently will the frost act upon it. This is of importance in effecting the destruction of the roots of weeds, and their seeds, as well as in exposing the ova of worms and other insects deposited beneath the surface. It has also a favorable effect upon the constituents of the soil itself, rendering the latter fine, by its powerful disintegrating action. It is scarcely possible to reduce the soil devoted to young fruit trees to too fine a tilth.—The more therefore, it is worked, the better it will be for the trees—always taking special care to avoid disturbing the roots.—Germantown Telegraph.
