The Land Owner.

When I come within sight of my farm, after having been away, a pleasant sensation aniscs within me, that no other feeling can equal. I am at home on my own land. These are my own acres, which the combined power of the country has guaranteed to me. It is mine, and my heirs forever. Here is the security. If there is any thing more stable in the world this is it. My fireside therefore is builded upon a sure foundation. I and my children are safe.
We are not intruded upon; no one has a right to do this; the strong arm of the law is ever ready to defend us.
Here I have my worship undisturbed. I attend to my concerns unmolested. In a word I am at home. And when In a word I am at home. And when my acres wave with grain, that grain and those acres are mine. I own them and I feel them. They are a part of myself. My cattle, not the cattle of thousand hill: are mine: I have raised them, and I know every one, as I know my household—"Boss" and "Brindle" and "Kitty's The old cow has a face as intelligent as many a person, and much more sympathy in it-honest old face! I could not do well without it. This is the farmer's privilege; and if he does not make the most of it, he is not worthy to be a farmer. If he does, no state in life is equal to it. He has all the poet speaks of in nature. No such vains as his —fragrantshowers. So are the winds which are always there -easily raised, and readily subsided. There are the fields with the blue skies over them and birds as musicians. The earliest birds of spring whose arrival is so interesting, are only enjoyed here. And so with the first of everything-flowers, grass, leaves, fruit, and the various changes of the seasons But, most, the freshness of the wind, ever sounding in your ears, with a sense of the cleanliness of nature; around you. And you are respected. few like the farmer, if any; few so happy as he. And thus he dies, and is buried in his own acres, vener-

Inconstant Farming.

It has seemed to us that much has been lost by many of our farmers, by what may properly be styled "inconstant farming." At a certain time some one product pays largely, then all rush into it to secure the large profits. In a few years a change of circumstances renders that, product less profitable, or, perhaps, unprofits able, then all are anxious to get out

Take sheep for instance. A few pound, sheep were in consequence very profitable and commanded high prices. The rush was then for sheep. No man could get enough of them. Farms were mortgaged and every resource strained to raise money with which to buy sheep, at hig figures, on the assumption, of course, that wool growing was to continue thus profitable, But it does not thus that word ground, thus profitable, But it does not thus continue. wool is down to less than half old time prices, and no one wants sheep. All who have them are anxious to sell, and, of course, they are very low. Those who sell at present prices, sheep which they bought when high, make a big thing, on the wrong side. This buying at high prices and selling at low is generally a losing business. The opposite is a safer operation. When wool is low and sheep a drug is the time to buy sheep. You will be quite sure soon be able to sell at profit. When wool is high and sheep in de-mand is the time to sell. You will be quite sure soon to be able to buy again at a loss rate, and save a profit. This same reasoning holds in reference to stock hogs, or anything else. Another policy, and we believe even a better one, is to decide what shall be the leading crops or stock and then steadily pursue the plan marked out, through thick and thin. This seems to us the safer and better way to secure generally satisfactory results. We hear farmers say this year, "It don't pay to put corn into pork this season. I wish I had no hogs to feed." If this was the only wear of his farming, perhaps that idea would be correct; but if he is following it as a regular, constant following it as a regular, constant business, we feel sure it is not correct. Corn this year is unusually high, because unusually scarce. If a farmer has hogs to eat it they may uot return him so much money as the corn would, if sold in market; but if he has no bogs to eat it this year, he will have none next, when corn may not be worth having to market, and the farmer may be glad to make fire wood of it, to get it out of his way. The true purpose of growing corn in this State is for feed. We are too far from market to grow it for shipping. An exceptional year now and then should not lead a farmer to feel that

Drs. H. A. Wise & J. M. Lefevre. then should not lead a fariner to feel that he is losing monoy by so feeding it. It is the true use to make of it as a general rule. Insteed, therefore, of wishing to be rid of his hogs or cattle be cause corn will sell this year for more in market the farmer should rather be improving his breeds and preparing to make them more profitable in future feeding. If skeep can be grown any where in the north to a profit they can be in Lowa. Any farm er who is properly situated far it, can make money from sheep, proxided he will make their growing a regular busishes a straight of the straigh

In consistant farmiing will not pay. Reg-ular, systematic farming which is based on a term of years rather than on the present year, in which plans are made for the future as well as for the present, is the only farming that will pay, in the
