A Bank President's Sharp Practice. During the year 1857, the president of a certain bank, situate not more than one hundred miles from a great city, became convinced that his institution was rather short of specie, and, in consequence, he found it rather difficult to make up his returns under oath, each week. After devising one means after another for months. he finally hit upon a new process, which succeeded admirably. Having an acquaintance of long standing with a gentleman who occupied an important position in the Post Office, he accosted him one morning as he was passing his bank, by saying, 'My good fellow, I want you to accommo date me a little, without discommoding yourself in the least." The official replied: "I have no objections to doing so upon such favorable terms, but tell me how it can be done?" The president, putting his lips close the ear of his triend, very blandly said " In your official capacity in the Post Office you retain in your possession large sums of money from week to week. Now what I want von to do is: to let me have about $10,000 in gold, which I can use to swear on in making up my returns, and whenever you want it, I'll return it."

But I cannot do that, my dear sir, the thing is impossible. I have to make out my returns as well as you. Besides which. you might by mistake use some of this coin, and thus ruin me.' ' Not at all, my friend. You can but it in a bag and seal it up, and I can return it on the days you may want it, and thumake it serve for us both in making up our accounts." The official could not be induced to agree to the arrangement then, but did finally consent to retain the proposition for a few days, and then give the president an an-In the course of a week, the president called upon his friend, and asked him for l the result of his delay.

He answered: "Now if I do this thing, you must understand that an exposition would ruin me forever, whilst my doing it is certainly to your advantage; I will, therefore, consider you under the greatest obligations to fulfil your promise of never opening the bag." 'Of course, sir," the president replied. "I will here swear to you, upon the honor of a gentleman, that the bag shall never be opened whilst in the bank's custody, or its officers, and that it shall be returned to you, whenever required."

"Very well; you recollect that I shall want it returned every Saturday morning. and you may send for it every Wednesday morning," said the official, at the same time handing the president a very heavy bag of coins superbly sealed up. The par-ties shook hands and parted, well pleased with each other, and the rest of mankind The President kept his oath to his friend most regularly every/week; he sent for the bag on Wednesday morning, and returned it on Saturday morning, with the seals unbroken. This continued during the summer and fall of 1857, nearly up to the time of the general suspension of the banks.— On the Friday of the week before the general suspension, the bank in question expe rienced quite a run from its note holder. and depositors, which continued during th morning-on to about two o'clock, when the specie of the bank became short. The President was walking backward and forward in the back office when the teller came in and informed him that the specie was gone, and some more must be obtained or close the doors. In great trepidation the worthy President went to the safe, and dragging out the Post Office bag, he hastily broke the seal and commenced pouring out the coin, when, with eyes wide open and face quite red, he exclaimed, "Why, these are all cents!" Putting on his hat, he rush ed over to the Post Office, and confronting his official friend, who sat in his chair very calmly examining some papers, said in a savage tone of voice. "Sir, you have ruin ed me! You have led me to perjure my self! I shall hold you accountable for the abominable piece of work!"

The official, turning in his chair, and smilingly looking his excited friend in the face, said. "What's the matter, Mr. ----You seem excited. Pray sit down and cool yourself off." "No, sir, I'll not sit down in your presence! You're a scoundrel. and shall be made to regret your conduct." "What have I done, Mr .---, that you should talk to me in this manner?" "Done! havn't you made me swear for weeks just to cents being gold? Is not that enough to make me excited?" "Well, sir, supposing I have, how did you know that they were cents and not gold?" "I opened the bag, sir, and detected the swindle." "You did, ch? Did you not swear to me that you would not do it? I think I am the one who should use hard names, and not you. If I had given you gold, you would have ruined me by using that which did not belong to me, and that which I had no business to let you have, and then you come here and abuse me. You swore that you believed you had so much gold; and no doubt you did believe it. If I deceived you, I did not do it with the intention of injuring you, but to save myself; for if it had ever been found out that I let you have $10,000 of the public. money, even if you had never touched it, I should have been ruined; but as it was, I let you have my own. As it has turned out, I feel very much pleased with my precaution."

The President looked wild for a while, and then putting on his hat, left the office, and his bank failed, $5 in cents in the safe.

Arotic Wonders.

The voyages of Dr. Kane have served to familiarize the popular mind with the wonders of the Arctic Sea. The dazzling polar day; the interininable whiteness; helds of ice floating, in huge masses, in the mysterious currents, that pulse warmly out of the impenetrable regions of forest; the walrus sliding with a dull splash into the water. at the approach of the *pear-armed sailor; the white bear, grim had sullen on his native rec, awaiting the attack of his pursucre; the mighty icebergs washing down, with their broad bases deep ploughing the ocean, and their tremendous peaks and pinhacles glittering alogt-looking like the titanesque views of some antique city of sea-kings; the sun wheeling in vast drurnal circles about the pole, but never setting; the gradual change from the endless day to the terrible Arctic night-the sun now touching the horizon, and now, just dipping below it, in his daily course; the curious phenomenal progress of might and winter, until the great luminary bounds up into sight, like a ball, disappearing again as suddenly, oncome the twenty-low hours, and at last is seen no more at all,—the wonderful hues of undday, and the long crunson sunset, when for weeks the earth vas a gorgeous wilderness of tinted snow and the sky a canopy of fire, now giving place to the seemingly eternal twinght the perils of hunger and cold, of being inextricably trozen in the closing ice-nelds, or crushed between meeting masses, in which the ship would be no more than ; nut under the heel of a giant, the exploring, the sledging, the saving-out, the struggle for life, until the welcome emerging sun once indiceshakes his ruday mane along the horizon, all these are number pictures to our imagination. But if we are to trust the speculation of men of science, income a dife Arche wee ders still want to be revealed. We have alfucked to the warm emirents that flow the north. Not less remarkable is the fact that, as the cold weather advances, the origits and sea-gulls imprate yearly towards the pole. The faither north the explorers go, the larger and finer they find the type of manhood in the race of Esquimanx The traditions of those boasal people point to the extreme north as the Eden of then history, the region where the Adam and Eve of the race originated, and where still ard to be found a mild country and an open sea. To men of science there exist many other equally strong points of evidence i onfirm the truth of their speculations and Dr. Hayes, the ichow-voyager of Di Kane, proposes litting out an expedition to go in search of a passage into this idea Arctic realm. Respecting this enterprise of De. Have Agassiz—the highest authority we have— holds the following language — I conside t as highly important, not only in a seientific point of view, but particularly for the shale fisheries. The organization of thes huge mhábitants of the ocean scema to me to furnish the most direct proof that their s an open sea in the Arctics. The whale being warm-blooded, air breathing dianab musticeme to the surface to breathe ... The cannot have without it. Now it is well known that during the winter they are inseen butsides that is, to the south of th ree-bell of the Arche seas. They is to northward during the cold season and the whole expanse of the Arctic sta wa covered with fee, they would meessarity perish during the cold writer. I desired know a more fluctoverence of the proceeds of extensive Jopen water in the northernmost regions of the globe, than the most of life of the whales, and the discovery of a passage into that open water, which would render whale tishing possible during to huch I have the winter, would be one of the most inc. portant results for the improvement of whale heling.

A recent explorer claims having discover ed this open sea, but the very rice of such a feel disting is wholly incredible to most mands. We hope Dr. Hayes will succeed in throwing some additional light upon the rubject.
