The organ grinders have returned. We which had accrued against the counties of heard the first notes on Monday, and on looking for their source saw a stalwart son of an organ campaign extending from the frozen shores of our lake to the orange groves of Florida, lazily leaning against an awning post and turning out the notes of "Poor Dog Tray," "The Old Folks at Home," "Uncle Ned," and such like familiar airs, interspersed with the "Marseilles Hymn" and "Yankee Doodle." It is a mystery to some where the organ grinder comes from and where he goes to. Away back in our memory we have a faint recollection of propounding such a query ourself. He is always here in summer-never in winter .-At the first symptom of ice and snow he and his organ disappear, to be seen and heard no more till the green grass under our feet and the notes of the robin in the trees beneath our window warn us that seed time and harvest is approaching.

Sometimes he is alone -- a solitary wanderer in search of coppers. Sometimes he is accompanied by the girl with the short skirt, ample fist, and gipsey eyes. Then in addition to week The country people are all busy with their "Poor Dog Tray" on the organ, you can hear "Buy a Broom" in the unmistakable vernacular of Switzerland, sung to a tambourine accompanizate that reminds you of your own prinkled twice a day in Meadville during the youthful efforts on a tin-pan instead of a drum. Sometimes, in addition to the dark eyed daughter of Switzerland, there may be a very small, and very hungry looking monkey, dressed in a dirty red coat, and a cap that is intended to represent the chapean of a field marshal of the days of Napoleon. Then the organ grinder the head of Washington, and on the reverse is on the high road to wealth-then do chil dren's pennies find their way to the capacious pockets of the daughter of Switzerland with less reductance; then do mothers and nurses become liberal: and then, as the very small and very hungry monkey shoulders arms, o puffs an imaginary cigar, and the dark-eyed damsel passes around the tambourine, does the stream of coppers flow in steady and strong at every corner. But still, neither from the man at the crank, nor the maiden with the tambourine, nor yet the monkey with the hungry look can the answer be obtained, where they go in the fall. Nobody, says an observer of the species, ever heard the strains of a hand organ when the snow was on the ground, nor is it easy to conceive a summer evening without the well known sounds floating upon the air somes its seem to be very genteel. For proof of where within ear-shot. Do they travel South take an observation almost any hour in with the birds as winter approaches, and travel Northward again in the track of advancing Spring? Do they slow themselves away with their monkeys, their organs and their tambourines in cheap lodgings in New York, Philadel phia, or Boston through the cold season, to emerge from the mud, like terrapins and frogs, when the sun has gained strength? or, least poetic of all, do they winter in some city alms The Meadville Express now leaves at thouse to swell the corporation bills for flour. and to consume municipal beef and mutton The natural habits of the tribe are a mystery time spoken of in the highest terms by which is as far beyond our comprehension; as where for the promptness with which passen - it is difficult to understand how they earn their wate put through. The Lycoming Gazette is one of the papers in the State that repudiated the nominees of the Democratic Convention of March 16. Notwithstanding this evidence of insanity, the editor has recently done two sensible things. Last week he married Gov. PAGEER'S daughter; and this week he has run up the State ticket, and promises to support it. A sensible wife is a great belp to an eratic young

Some author says that at twenty-five nen marry for love—at thirty-five for beauty and convenience—and at fifty for money. This is well illustrated by the confession of an honest old Dutch tavern-keeper in the lower part of this State. "Vell, you see," said he, "the first time I married for love-dat vas goot ; den marries for beauty-dat vas goot, too, about as goot as de first ; dis time I marries for monev-and dis is better as both."

We find the following in the Warren Mail. It is evident somebody in Erie is hit .-Who is it? Certainly it can't be the chap of the Express who says he has voted the Democratic ticket twenty-eight years, although he was a candidate for a Republican nomination last fall. "Dan Rice, the great Circuser, is again on his travels. But he has made a had start. He is in danger of being ruined by the Editors. In Buffalo he found one who actually rode the mules and won his money. In Erie he found another, only sixteen weeks in the ring, who came in by Express and beat his tumblers, clown and all, in turning summersets! But Dan is shrewd. He thinks now that if he can nly get that Eric "feller," and keep him in his one season, he can skunk all creation!"
