boldness and pride; a soft melancholy overshadowed his countenance, and an air of voluptuous suffering quivered about his welling lips, around which a timid smile rarety played, like a gentle wave gliding over pearls and coral. His mind corresponded to such a person. Loving and enlearing, of a grave and melancholy seren ity, of more internal than external activity, he preferred solitude to the bustle and tumult of society, but attached himself with the strongest affections to those who treated him with kindness and friendship. His inmost heart was thus warmed by a fire which, like that of a volcano, buried too deep to break out at the surface, is only The Goods must and will be sold before October next, at which time I will endeavor to commence the business on a system more united to the times, and more bundless with the brightest flowers. The fathers | We may imagine the shudder which rar were soon agreed; and it was decided that through the crowd—the feelings of the Gonsalvo should secompany his future father we cannot imagine—when, restored father-in-law to the coast of Ireland, and to sense, he embraced his father's knees, if the inclinations of the young people fa-declared himself the murderer of Gonsalvo, if the inclinations of the young people fa-vored the project, their union should take and carnestly implored instant punish place at the same time with Edward's after which they should immediately return to Spain. Gonsalvo, who was just nineteen, accompanied the reverend friend of his father with joy. His young romantic spirit enjoyed, in silent and delighted anticipation, the varying scenes of strange lands which he was about to mu; the wonders of | er, demanded, with threatening cries, the the deep which he would contemplate; the opening of the prison and the pardon of new sort of existence of unknown people the criminal. During the night, though with whom he was to be connected; and the guards were doubled, it was with great his warm heart already attached itself to difficulty that the incensed mob were withthe girl, of whose charms her father gave held from breaking in. Towards morning him, perhaps, a too partial description.— Every moment of the long voyage, which at that time abounded in dangers, and which required a much longer period than now, increased the intimacy and mutual attachment of the travelers; and when at length they descried the port of Galway, the elder Lynch congratulated himself not only on the second son which God had sent him, but on the beneficial influence which the gentleness of the amiable youth would have on Edward's dark and more vehoment character. This hope appeared likely to be completely fulfilled. -Edward, who found in Gonsalvo all that was wanting in himself, felt his own nature as it were completed by his society; and as he had already learned from his father that he was to consider him as a brother, their friendship soon ripened into the warmest and most sincere affection. But not many months had passed before some uneasy feelings arose in Edward's mind to trouble feelings arose in Edward's mind to trouble—your earthly happiness.—But that is past, this harmony.—Gonsalvo had become the Turn your thoughts now to eternity; and husband of his sister, but had deferred his—and if there yet be hope there, let us now could not conceal from himself that he had found a successful rival of his former universal and uncontested popularity. ARRIVAL OF TWO CHIRIQUI EXPLOREES .-Some four months ago, the staunch, sharp-pointed, and fleet little schooner, Nautilus, formerly in the United States Revenue service, left New York for Chiriqui, with Wm. Hance, Chas. G. B. Coffin, Dr. Henry Ball and Samuel Gunther on board, whose avowed purpose was to delve among the mountains and streams of Chiriqui in search of gold. Two of these gentlemen recently returned with fabulous stories of what they had discovered. The New York $1,50 PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. Times says: NUMBER 32.

For miles along the mountains the explorers prospected for gold. They claim to have hit upon better diggings than were ever found in California, but the localities they refuse to specify. Butler, the Democratic candidate or Governor of Massachusetts, presents a ively view of the internal affairs of the ommonwealth that busies itself so much about fancied wrongs in other States. "According to the statistics furnished lo the present State legislature, as a proof of their own committee, it is more dangerous to spend a year in a Massachusetts almshouse than it would have been to have led the charge of the Zouaves at the battle of Magenta. I see this statement strikes some of you almost with dread. Let me repeat. There was a larger proportion of regularly among the mountains that regiment which led the attack at the tender attachment which the young man the AN-Seeing alone can decide whether it battle of Solfering came out unscathed from the battle than were out of the paupers of 1858 who came out alive from the State alms-house of Massachusetts [Sensation.] many was the average number of paupers in the State alms-houses during the year 1858 / Two thousand seven hundred and some odd.
