WOLFGANG;

THE WRECKER'S BEACON. CHAPTER II.

WOLFANG. Maurice Lester was near the starboard gangway when the ship struck, having started aft to look to the helm. The shock threw him upon his back, and he tried to get up; but ere he could remain his feet the flood of mad waters came surging over the bark, and he was thrown-he knew not where. He only knew that the flood came—that it caught him in its giant grasp that it hurled him as the gale hurls feather—that his head was hurt—that his hady was tossed and bruised-and then the lamp of his consciousness, went out.~ When he came to himself it was daylight, and the rays of the sun were beaming above | him. At first he did not attempt to move, any further than simply to assure himself that he was really alive and sensible; but -ought to recall the events of the past, which he did, very clearly, up to the time when his ship struck upon the rocks, - he could go no farther. After this he raised himself upon his elbow, and tried to gaze about him. He found himself upon a bed of sand, between two immense rocks. He had been landed there in that deep nook, and the tide had gone out and left him. In a little while he rose to his feet, and managed to crawl up, by the aid of a stranded spar, over a low part of one of the After seeing all that was to be observed from this point, he moved on towards where he thought he should soonest find in open beach, for he felt faint and sick, and he wished to find help as soon as possible. After toiling over slippery, slimy rocks, and cruel, tearing craes, until his clothing was all torn, and his flesh bruised and lacerated, he finally reached an oper space among the rocks, where many pieces of the wreck had been lodged, and where he found the bodies of three of his men.-He hastened to the spot where they laytwo of them being clasped in each other's arms. but he found no signs of life.

With a sad, he wy heart. Lester passed on, and presently he found two more dead ones, and one of them was David Griffin. his chief mate. He kneeled down by the officer's side, and rused the head; but it wis cold and lifeless and the skull was broken! Gently he laid it back upon the sand, and then moved on again. And he saw more dead men also! Could it be possible that he had been the only one left

Ha!--wait--what is this? It moves--it has life! Captain Lester hurried forward, as fast as his feeble strength would permit, and found two men lying by the side of a heavy spar. One of them was dead but the other gazed up into his commander's face, and stretched forth his hands as though he would ask for mercy. His name was bick Mangle, and he had been one of the best seamen on board the ship,

"Poor Dick!" said Lester, kneeling by his side and lifting his head. "Are you badly hurt?"

"They've done it for us!" the sailor answered in a weakening voice. They've killed Tom. Aint he dead?" It was the body of stout Tom Bricket that lay close by, and when the captain had made himself sure that there was no particle of life in it, he reported the same "But," he added, "what do you mean?

Who has done you harm?" "Haven't you seen 'em " the man asked, truggling for breath. Seen whom? What do you mean?" demanded Lester, eagerly.

Dick started up on his elbow, and gazed around; but he seemed to find nothing for which he was looking, and he sank back again. Had he not made this effort he rising had exhausted him, and the last grain of strength was leaving him. 'What do you mean?" cried Lester, as he saw that the poor fellow was sinking .--'Has any body harmed you?" Dick managed to raise his hand to his head-to a point above the left car-and, as he did so, he whispered—

"Look out—they asked for the capt'n.-That's where they struck!" He tried to speak further, but his voice failed him. What could this mean? Maurico laster started to his feet and gazed around Who had killed his men?

The captain was disturbed in his meditation by the sound of voices not far off. and upon turning he beheld four men coming up from the water. He who came in advance was a tall, muscular man; with a gaunt, heavy frame; somewhere about lifty or fitty-five years of age; and habited in a garb of blue cloth, cut into a trock, or shirt, which was secured at the waist by broad pistol-belt.

Maurice Lester was startled when he beheld the stalwart leader and his three ruffianly companions; and, considering all the circumstances, it is no wonder he was startled. However, he had not much opportunity for reflection, for, by the time he had fairly made out the party, they were upon him.

"Hallo," the leader cried, as he saw our hero, "here we have another." And, as he came up, headded: "And I guess we've found a live one, too-one that know-something. - Say -who are ye?"

This last sentence was addressed to Mautice, who quickly answered: My name is Lester. And now, to be tair, what is your name?"

"Well-I guess you've heard it before Men call me Ryan Wolfgang."
"Wolfband." repeated Lester, with

'Yes. That is my name." Then Wolfgano was not a mythafter all That mysterious wrecker, whose name was a source of terror to honest sailors, was a being of flesh and blood, like other men Maurice gazed upon him with wonder; and, as he gazed, he felt that he looked upon a fiend incarnate. He had ofter heard of the pirate-wrecker, and so dark and mystic had been the tales which the North-Sea sailors had told, that he had been inclined to believe that the whole theme was a fabrication. Now, however. he had no more doubt, for the man before him looked as dark and bloody as were any of the pictures he had heard drawn of him upon the forecastle. But our hero was not allowed much time for reflection. Wolfgang plied him with questions, to all of which Lester gave traightforward answers; well knowing that evasion would serve no practical pur-pose, and hoping by his frankness to propitiate the merciless fiend in whose unre-strained power he knew himself to be.

When the wrecker chief had elicited all the information he could, and learned with what a rich cargo the vessel was freighted, and that she had $40,000 in specie on board, he smiled grimly, and remarked to one of his confederates that she would perhaps be a richer prize even than the White Face had been a few years before. The mention of the name of the ill-fated ship in which Carrie Thornton and her father had been lost, gave Maurice Lester such a shock that he nearly fell to the earth. He grew deadly pale, and his frame quivered convulwively. "What's the matter?" said Wolfgang. "You don't seem to have much strength left!-Bring him along, boys, where we

The sinister glance which accompanied this last remark, and the peculiar empha-sis laid upon the word "doctor," struck a chill to our hero's heart. But he could not give his own safety much thought, while he was partly forced and partly carried along after Wolfgang, who strode rapidly on for nearly half an hour. He could think only of the White Farm that had been wrecked on that coast, and of his beloved Carrie who had, perhaps, in company with those same men, trod the same path he was now treading. What had been her fate? Had she been murdered by these wretches, or reserved for some more deplorable doom? Those thoughts filled him with unutterable [116 ARS.—A lot of very fine ones, for salest

Wolfgang had now drawn near the wa ter's edge; and soon coming to the mouth of a cave he entered it, followed by the three ruffians who had charge of our hero The bottom of the cave sloped upward from its entrance for some distance, and then became almost level. The captive (for such Maurice Lester now felt himself to be) frequently hit his feet against what he thought, with a chill of horror, were human bones strewn around the cavern, but he i could not clearly make them out in the dim light. He also noticed that the bottom of the cave was very wet, as though it! had recently been covered with water. The ing a sign to his followers, they chapped ALBANY, No. 148 Broadway. manacles on the wrists and ankles

Maurice before he had time to note their "Now, Captain Lester," said Wolfgung, you must remain in this place for a short season. For are perfectly sate here.—Silence Say not a word! If you attempt to leave this spot, you will be slain the moment you set foot outside the cave," Thus speaking the chieftain and his followers silently but rapidly withdrew, leaving Maurice nearly stupified with astorishment. As they passed from the mouth of the cave, their feet were wet by the rising waves. The take was first comen fin. After a short time, the captive looked about him with eyes somewhat accustomed to the dim light, and became satisfied that what he had supposed to be the human. bones were really such. There were many, of them. And moving among them were hugo rats, seeking for prey. The top of the cavern, in some places, was but a towfeet above his head, and in one place he bscovered a small aperature, through which a faint light struggled, and on going underneath it, he thought he ment the sdor of vegetation and flowers. On turning, from the contemplation of this aparture, towards the mouth of the cave, Captain Lester observed, with damthat the water was creeping up the sloping sottom. What it it should find the civern? Ah! now he could account to the presence there of those human bone They were the sad memorials of other hapless prisoners who had been left in that case to much by demand

Slowly but surely the waters crept along The vermin fled before him to the clevaed spot on which Maurice stood Slowly following, the incoming water at length reached his feet!

At the end of the cave, within a few feet of the wall, and underneath the aperature before spoken of, was a large piecee of rock, some four feet high, that might have fallen from above. To this Maurice hastened as quickly as his manacles would permit -After some exertion be succeeded in climb ing to the top of it, and stood erect, his head within a few inches of the roof of the cavern. But he was not allowed to occupy this retreat alone. As the water began to circle round its base, the rate also sought refuge on it in great numbers, and in vaindid Maurice try to dislodge them with his manacled feet

Soon (as it seemed to the captive) the water came rippling over the top of the rock. He felt its moisture upon his feet. And still it rose- slowly but relentlessly it rose higher—higher; and is it rose, the rats climbed up his limbs for safety. It was in vain that he brushed them off with his fettered hands. They instantly returned. They clambered up his back to his shoulders - over the back of his neck - to the crown of his head; their clammy bod ies striking a chill to his very heart.

And still higher the waters rose, and more thickly the foul vermin clustered upon the devoted captive's shoulders and head, as their only places of safety. Driven frantic at last by the horrors of his sit nation, he was about to plunge into the surging tide and seek a watery grave, when his attention was arrested by the tread of
