NEW GAS LIGHT! THE OLEO-WATER GAS!

Patented by Prof. L. L. Hill, June 17, 1862.

This Gas has been thoroughly tested by men of science, and its merits have stood the greatest scrutiny. It can be manufactured for

50 CENTS PER 1,000 CUBIC FEET.

It is perfectly free from offensive smell, not liable to explosion and will not condense in any temperature or climate.

It has a bold, clear light to the foot Coal Gas and gives a much more brilliant light.

We are now prepared to offer the Petroleum Gas Apparatus to the Public, which must eventually take the place of all other Gases, owing to the cheapness with which it can be made, its brilliancy of light, its perfect simplicity and its adaptability in all cases where good light is required.

PRIZE POETRY.

Let Chieftains be set of decks in war,
And Minstrels tune their sweet guitar,
A nobler theme my heart it fills—
In praise of HERRICK'S matchless Pills.

Their cures are found in every land—
'Mid Russia's snows—and Afric's sand
Their wondrous works—the papers tell,
Produced by HERRICK'S matchless Pills.

Does disease afflict you? do not doubt
This cleansing compound will search it out,
And health again your system fill,
If you fly at once to HERRICK'S Pills.

They're safe for all—both old and young
Their praises are on every tongue;
Disease dispersed—no longer kills,
Since we are blessed with HERRICK'S Pills.

LYON'S KATHAIRON. This delightful article for preserving and beautifying the human hair is again put up by the original proprietor, and is now made with the same care, skill and attention, which first created its immense and unprecedented sales of over one million bottles annually! It is still sold at 25 cents in large bottles. Two million bottles can easily be sold in a year when it is again known that the Kathairon is not only the most delightful hair dressing in the world, but that it cleanses the scalp of scurf and dandruff, gives the hair a lively, rich, luxuriant growth, and prevents it from turning gray. These are considerations worth knowing. The Kathairon has been tested for over twelve years, and is warranted as described. Any lady who values a beautiful head of hair will use the Kathairon. It is finely perfumed, cheap and valuable. It is sold by all respectable dealers throughout the world. D. S. BARNES & CO., jan3m6. New York.

HEIMSTREET'S INIMITABLE HAIR RESTORATIVE, IT IS NOT A DYE, but restores gray hair to its original color, by supplying the capillary tubes with natural sustenance, impaired by age or disease. All fashionable dyes are composed of Lunar Caustic, destroying the vitality and beauty of the hair, and afford of themselves undeniable evidence of their use. Heimstreet's Inimitable Coloring not only restores hair to its natural color, by an easy process, but gives the hair a LUXURIANT BEAUTY, promotes its growth, prevents its falling off, eradicates dandruff, and imparts health and pleasantness to the head. It has stood the test of time, being the original Hair Coloring, and is constantly increasing in favor. Used by both gentlemen and ladies. It is sold by all respectable dealers, or can be procured by them of the commercial agents, D. S. BARNES & CO., 202 Broadway, N. Y. Use also, 50 cents and $1. jan24'63-6m

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.—Farmers, families and others can purchase no remedy equal to Dr. Tobias' Venetian Liniment, for dysentery, colds, croup, chronic rheumatism, sore throats, toothache, sea-sickness, cuts, burns, sunstroke, sore nipples, old sores, headache, mosquito bites, pains in the limbs, chest, back, &c. If it does not give relief the money will be refunded. All that is asked is a trial, and use it according to the directions.

DR. TOBIAS—Dear Sir: I have used your Venetian Liniment in my family for a number of years, and believe it to be the best article for what it is recommended that I have ever used. For sudden attack of croup it is invaluable. I have no hesitation in recommending it for all the uses it professes to excel it; have sold it for many years, and it gives entire satisfaction. CHAS. H. IN MEMORY OF THOMAS CUMMINS.

[Killed, at the battle of Gaines' Mills, before Richmond, on the 27th day of June, 1862, Thomas Cummins, a young man of more than ordinary promise. In all the vigor of his youth, in all the flush and promise of his early years, he went forth to meet his fate, marching, fife, trusting and confident. Companions testify to his courage in time of perilous danger; and his fatal and speedy plunge thus verbal testimony, that he was foremost on that dread battle-field, or he would not have met with one and yet gloriously. Though we grieve that he is among us no more, that his presence will never again gladden the sad hearts of fond parents—we know that, though he sleeps to all of earth, yet he has awakened in a fairer land than ours, that he dwells in bliss incomprehensible in the presence of the great God upon his throne for ever and ever more. To his bereaved parents we say, let your mourning be turned into joy, for has not our Heavenly Father favored you much in thus taking into the bosom of his infinite Mercy, your dearly loved son.]

In death's cold embrace our loved one lies sleeping,
Where gentle winds whisper 'neath the Southern skies;
Far, far from his home, where each fond one is weeping
Our Thomas, our darling, our dearest son lies.

All a father's fond hopes in this loved one were centred,
The joy, the support of his fast whitening years;
But, alas, for such dreams, they too soon have been scattered,
To give place but to mourning and fast flowing tears.

And mother's chaste, with pure, holy affection,
Can know the great loss, or fathom the woe,
That rend the grieved heart, thus sadly afflicted,
Death has come on earth but a mother may know.

As you this hour, while the world is in stepping,
All supreme, all radiant with hope fresh and bright;
With never a thought or a sigh for the danger—
He went forth to battle for God and the Right.

But kind for our boy! oh broking heart quiet,
Oh God give us strength to submit to thy will—
Thou hast taken our darling, and left us all lonely,
Yet Father, we love thee, we worship thee still.

And we know tho' we're lonely, and sad, and repining,
That in Peace with his Lord he dwelleth on high;
And will murmur no more, but in faith and adoring,
Hope to meet Thomas, our son, beyond the blue sky.

For the Observer.

The Slaves of the South.

Though the negro slave has been of late years the most prominent object before the American people, and almost before the world, and while he has been heretofore unnecessarily lugged into notice, and has given color to our most solemn discussions at the National Capital, yet among those who have had no acquaintance with him except from the reports of Congressional debates, the harangues of self-styled philanthropic orators, or the absurd stories of Abolition novel writers, knowledge of his real position is probably as limited as the ideas concerning the inhabitants of China or Japan, and the acquaintance with their manners and laws.

The popular idea of the negro slave has been derived, in the North and in Europe, almost entirely from books of the Uncle Tom's Cabin order, and from those visionary friends of negro freedom who have represented him in the character of a highly intelligent and refined being, groaning in helpless misery and constantly held down by the oppression of his master and the consciousness of his own helpless degradation, but only awaiting an assisting hand to rise to the topmost heights of human ambition and acquirement. But though these fanciful ideas have been heretofore encouraged, it is now best that an effort should be made to give some true account of his status and peculiarities.

Now that he is no longer known by the disrespectful title of "nigger," or more euphonious and playful "nig," but is invested by that humorous individual who presides in the White House, with the sonorous designation, "Free American of African descent;" now that he has become connected with the history of the country as a Union soldier, has been called upon to save the government, and has burst upon our vision in all the glory of red breeches, brightly polished musket and in the full grandeur of martial dignity, it becomes requisite that American citizens of White descent—probably not much longer to be known as "Cæsar"—make themselves more familiar with his characteristics, and become fully conscious of that upon which they are to place their trust.

And let us first consider the actual condition of the slave as he was when civil war disturbed his equanimity, and false friends began to beguile him from comfort to misery. And at the outset we shall disagree most radically with all the received dogmas of Abolitionism, and directly deny the assertions of the vast libraries of anti-slavery literature that have deluged the land, including Mrs. Stowe's work; the chief in importance, as it is also the most ingenious and uncharitable combination of the worst and most isolated facts, with the most blushing falsehood and insidious misrepresentation ever put forth to mislead the unwary and excite the prejudices of the unthinking. We make the statement that the romantic type of negro does not exist, and that the Miss Ophelias and Georges of that work have never had their prototypes among the slaves of the South, and have their being alone in the fertile brain and perverted imagination which conceived them, and has placed the minds of others under the dominion of a similar lunacy. Neither is there to be found once in a thousand, a master or overseer with the character of Legree; nor are slaves whipped to death or otherwise murdered. In the writer's somewhat extended experience, he never heard of the whipping of a negro to death, and knew of but one instance of the killing of one, and that by an overseer while the slave was in the act of making an attack upon him. Such things have occurred, but they are not the rule, nor of such frequency as to warrant us in denouncing slaveholders as murderers.

It may be well to consider the legal status of slaves, and here we say that the much abused "Slave Code" of the Southern States, is a somewhat different compilation of Laws from that which the Abolitionists have taught the people to denounce. Its principal enactments are for the punishment of offences committed by slaves, and these penalties are never more severe than those which would be inflicted on the master for like misdemeanors; and differ from the other penal enactments only in the providing of pecuniary fines, to be paid to the master, for the indemnification of the loss by negro peculations, instead of the imprisonment awarded to the white man, and also, in some cases, the infliction of the maximum of thirty-nine lashes, the last penalty having been, until a very recent date, in force in several States, as well as in England, and applied to free white men.

Again, it may not be generally known that the laws of most of the slaveholding States, impose the severest penalties upon the master who kills his slave, or that he who allows himself to be thus forgetful of humanity, is visited by a still more severe judgment, in the condemnation and universal avoidance of the community in which he lives. The wilful and malicious murder of a slave, is punished as other murder. But perhaps the worst, real evil of slavery, and the one most dwelt upon by its opponents, is the separation of members of the same family from each other; but even this loses much of its offensiveness, when we consider the true state of the marital relation among the negroes. They are not, as might be erroneously supposed, inclined to be very constant in their affections, and though masters encourage marriages by every means in their power, always allowing the negroes to enjoy themselves on such occasions to the full extent, yet a negro generally arrives at a considerable age before he can confine himself to the fragrance of one, and one only, sable rose. It is also a great fact to be borne in mind that the master of slaves never voluntarily parts the wife from her husband, or children from their parents. It is only when compelled to the sale of his property by inexorable creditors, that the master sees with sorrow the families of his slaves divided. In case of death and distribution of estates families are kept together. When we are considering the "barbarism of slavery," it is no more than just to remember these facts, and understand the subject we treat with, lest being mistaken, we incur the odium due to bigotry, or the ridicule attaching to ignorance.

As to the relations of the slaves with their masters and with each other, it has also been the custom to draw largely on false philanthropy and morbid sentiment, by representing them as moody, discontented, filled with concealed hatred toward their masters, and only awaiting the favorable moment of the withdrawal of restraint, to take vengeance on their oppressors. A most mistaken idea, as events since the beginning of the war have conclusively shown. The mutual affection existing between master and bondman, stands a living proof of the falsehood of the friends of negro freedom. Comfortable in his humble cabin, attended in childhood, sickness and old age, with a kindness no laboring population elsewhere on earth can boast, he would be indeed the fool and knave his false friends would make him, were he to cease to be grateful, obedient and contented. They have, it is true, their plots and conspiracies, but they do not aim at freedom, or assassination, or midnight massacres, but are confined to harmless artifices for avoiding their tasks, or procuring the extra luxuries for a secret frolic; and in the eager and cheerful emulation in their labor, when the reward of their additional industry is but the favor of their master, it would be hard to find the idea so affectingly dilated upon by Mrs. Stowe, of the naked, bruised and bleeding slave, crawling groaning to his pallet of straw, when his hard and thankless work was done.

The negro, until recently, was happy, contented, and beloved in his sphere of usefulness, and cared for under all circumstances with a kindness many a poor man or woman, whose skin is white and who boasts of freedom might rejoice to be the recipient of, and this continued until his master became frightened for fear that the North were about to destroy the harmonious working of their labor system. The negroes, too, had some vague ideas concerning the effect which the election of "Massa Linkin" was to have upon them, and though assured in common with the rest of mankind, that the Republican party had no idea of meddling with them, they still clung to the opinion that some interference was intended, as did the whole foreign world, and two-thirds of the people of the United States. The Emancipation Proclamation and general tone of the Republican press, have of course demonstrated that the world was mistaken in their belief! But though the slaves thus understood the purposes of their deliverers, yet the knowledge did not seem to excite in them any very ecstatic emotions, nor did the "long smothered flames of liberty" give any sign that even a spark remained. On the contrary, the negro went to his allotted task without a murmur, and afterwards with singular sympathy for his oppressors, followed his master to the battle field, where, after he had been shot by those whom the slave supposed to be the friends of his freedom, his bleeding body was found among the slain by the still faithful bondman, who tearfully attended it to its hasty grave with the grief of a dependant for a friend and protector. Only by persuasion and the hope of plunder has the Southern negro been induced to leave the care of his master, even in those places where Federal authority has been long continued. The intellectual developments of the African slave are an excellent memory, large benevolence, and a natural love for music. Generally docile, faithful and affectionate, yet he is indolent in mind and body, and licentious, improvident, avaricious and cunning. Of the higher qualities of human nature he has but few; he has neither courage, pride of character, nor energy, and his sentiment of reverence leads him, even under constant religious instruction, to the marvelous and superstitious rather than the elevating and moral.

When we consider these things, together with the long habit of subjection of the slave to his master, it will scarcely be thought that the negro possesses the qualifications of soldiership except in the single particular of obedience. But we have no desire to throw cold water upon the warm hopes of the Abolitionists, and most sincerely trust that his combative qualities will be such as to relieve some of the own color from the thankless task of fighting for the doubtful benefit of a race who neither desire our services or appreciate our efforts.

The writer has thus endeavored to give some of the real facts in regard to the negro, facts sedulously concealed and ignored by the anti-slavery party, and though he went into the land of slavery with all those prejudices against that system of labor so carefully instilled into the people of the North, from their earliest infancy, he has been obliged to contradict some of the most general opinions as being contrary to his experience and observation, as well as to the recorded statutes of the land; yet he would wish to be thought as having done so only in a spirit of candor and fairness. But he cannot refrain from contrasting the once happy, contented and peaceful condition of these people with their possible future of want, misery, bloody calamity and ultimate extinction. When we remember their ignorance, their want of the higher attributes that restrain the generality of mankind from excess, their proneness to be led astray, and willingness to be commanded, and see them, actuated by lust, and the hope of plunder, at length giving vent to their newly excited hostility to their masters, in ungovernable fury, what direful visions of carnage, barbarity and ferocity revel rise before our eyes. Desolated homes, violated innocence, atrocious assassinations; a land given up to the fury of a heretofore servile and subordinate race, while on the clouds that rise above a section devastated by fire and sword, the fiend of Abolition rides triumphant and grins gleefully through the blazing light of once happy homes. Are the warnings of history to be forgotten? are those Heaven-born gifts, benevolence and philanthropy, to be the means of barbarism, wrong and oppression? Are the cries of helpless woman and babes to be borne to our ears on every breeze, and not a voice be heard to stay the fury of servile insurrection? Are murder, desolation and despair, at our command, to visit the hearthstones of those who should be our brethren and friends? God forbid that on the page of our history ever should be written so black, so damning a record! But rather abandoning those wild and fratricidal doctrines which in times past have deluged the fairest lands with blood, let us walk again in the paths of christian civilization, and perpetuate our fame as the guardians of those twin born children of Liberty—Justice and Humanity.

The Dangers of Disunion.

SPEECH OF HON. EDWARD EVERETT IN BOSTON.

From the recent address delivered by Hon. Edward Everett in Boston, we take the following passages:

THE QUESTION OF LETTING THE SOUTH GO.

There is no alternative but to acknowledge the independence of the confederacy, or to subdue the rebellion by the strong arm of military power. To suppose that there is hope of any other settlement is the grossest delusion. Can you then recognize the independence of the confederacy? Remember that it carries with it acknowledged defeat, in a war of aggression, arrogantly provoked, by an enemy notoriously inferior in numbers, financial means
