RETURN of the filest Brainings.—The there. It was the aufallest sight next morn-allant old 111th regiment, which has seen ing I ever saw. They were all torn to pieces, galiant old 111th regiment, which has seen more hard fighting, done more active duty and almost any other in the country, returned to this city, on Thursday afternoon, and was accorded a brilliant and most apprepriate reception. Information of its coming was received several days before, and arrange ments made to receive the regiment in a fitting manner. The ladies of the city prepared a sumptuous repast in Wayne Hall, the public buildings and many of the private ones were richly decked with flags, emblems and mottoes soldiers who had periled so much for the cause they hold dear. The arrival of the train was announced to the public by the ringing of the Court House bell, and at once a vast stream of people poured towards the depot. When the soldiers alighted from the cars they were welcomed with three rousing cheers, and their radiant faces told in language plain enough the delight which they felt at being home once more .-Mothers and sisters rushed up to greet the ions and the brothers from whom they had been parted so long, and the scenes of endearment which followed were too numerous and too sacred to describe. Many of the noble fellows could not restrain their emotion, and found the tears crooping up and filling their fur " eyes, very much apparently in opposition to their sense of manly honor. The regiment marched down State street, escorted by Mehl's Band and the marines and crews of the Michigan. Lieut. Col. Walker was in command, in the absence of Col. Cob ham, who, we believe, is on a visit to his home Warren: The regiment was accompanied by a portion of the battery commanded by Capt, Leutje, numbering about a dozen men. Both sides of the street were crowded with spectators, many of whom, in their eagerness to see friends in the regiment, pressed into the lines, and were obliged to be forced back by the soldiers.

In front of Brown's Hotel the regiment halted, formed into close column, and was welcomed home in a short speech, by John P. Vincent, Esq., which was very neatly worded and well spoken. Col. Walker replied in a few remarks which we have never heard excelled for pointed and modest expression. He thanked the citizens warmly for their kind reception, and said the best encouragement a soldies could have was the knowledge that his acts were approved by the friends at home .--He did not take any of this warm reception to himself; it was all for the gallant fellows whom he had the honor of commanding. He could testify that they were worthy officvery. thing their fellow citizens might do for them. Without exception, officers and men, they had faithfully performed their duty. He might have helped a little, in his humble way, to uphold the sacred flag against the attacks of those who would destroy our untional glory, out he could have done nothing had he not been so nobly sustained by his soldters. We. of course, give only a summary of the Colonel's remarks, which, if possible, we hope to see printed in full. They did credit slike to liver Hall—at suit of Jay Tuttle use of E. him as a man, a soldier and a public speaker. During these ceremonies, there were repeated cheers, and the whole passed off very finely.

The soldiers then marched to Wayne Hall, where a large number of ladies were in waiting, who gave the regiment a most cheering reception. A nest speech of welcome was made by Mrs. Grove H.
