Had we possessed an efficient fire department and apparatus, this fire could have been extinguished almost as soon as it was discovered. Everybody in the city admits our deficiency in this respect, and yet, there is no action taken to remedy it, and we expect, from the fate that other important movements have met with, that if an effort is made new it will be a failure. Some of these days we will have a fire that will sweep away a large portion of the city, and not till then will our community wake up from their unaccountable neglect on the subject.
