bile the Famous Professor of Moral and Merry Philosophy has had an especial eye to the countenance, support and commendations of the GOOD, REFINED AND INTELLIGENT He has by no means ignored the exigencies of those with tastes less pure whe unfortunately have had too much remain to suppose that the element of vulgarity was indispensable to the enjoyment of a public exhibition. In his RIGH SCHOOL he hopes to demonstrate that an entertainment may be MORAL AND EXCHADISCHT ANDING, at the same time instructive and interesting and when he attempts to "point a moral or draw tale" with a manufactor, or disarran a satire or returk with a jest, he feels that the tendency of the moral will not detract from the jest as each, nor the homerous garb prevent the moral take root.
