Mollellan at the time of the Bight at Malvern Hill, and saw General Kcarney, on the right of the second line of battle, and I therefore know that the story is false that he hid himself away on an fron-clad, when he was surrounded by an army of soldiers who loved him so well.

I also saw him the morning we reached Harrison's Landing. He came along on horseback through the different regiments, and asked the officers and men if they had plenty of rations, telling them that if anything was wanting to make requisition at once for fresh beef, -ke., saying there was plenty for the army. The story that Gon, McClellan and his army were crouching under the hills at Harrison's Landing is a slander upon those brave men.. There were not thirty guns fired after we reached that point. The only battery that opened on us at that time was taken from the
