At the last session of Congrass Hon. Wm. H. Miller, of Pennsylvanis, submit-WHEREAS, The entire people of the prisoners of war in the Confederate States : And whereas, The commonest prompt-ings of humanity should induce the Executive Representative of the nation to their distressed condition, and restore them to their homes : And whereas, We are well informed that the number: of Confederate prisoners in our hands is vastly in excess of the number of Federal prisoners in theirs, and that exchange could be made, excluding the question of color, that would restor our white brethren to liberty, without prejudicing what may be supposed to be the rights of colored Federal soldiers, now prisoners of war : therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to promptly instruct those having in charge the matter of the exchange of prisoners between the United States and the socalled Confederate States, to proposes an exchange of white men for white men, leaving other questions to be disposed of when the suffering white sons of the Re-public shall have been restored to the service of the government, their friends and firesides.

George H. Pendleton voted in favor o this resolution, but the Abolitionists voted it down, and passed a substitute approving the measures of the administration refusing to make exchange of prisoners, unless negroes were exchanged by the Richmond authorities.

lustances like these might be cited by the column to prove Mr. Pendleton's his satelliter or his party. Non-interference consistant devotion to the interests of our is what we ask, and what we WILL HAVE, soldiers. The above are all copied from the official documents, and as we said at the commencement of this article, we eballenge contradiction in regard to them. On the score of firm, straight-forward and manly Unionism, George H. Pendleton's career is equally clear. Read his late, speech in New York, published on our first page, his letter to some friends in Missouri, printed in last week's Observer, and his recent letter to Hon. John B. Hrskin, and then deny if. you dare that the author of these productions is as true a patriot as lives in the country. All the stories affecting his reputation are "base inventions of the enemy," designed for political effect. On the score of mental attainments, of purity of character, of emilted statesmanship, and of unimpeschable Unionism, Geo. H. Fendleton is every way worthy to be associated on the ticket with Gen. McClellan, and both are antitled to the confidence and votes of the people.

The voting of the New York soldiers in the army on James river is now nearly

As to the seldiers vote the greatest difficulty will exist in preventing fraudulent returns, and is so conducting an election that there may be a fair expression of the opinion of the army. As far as possible the Democracy will lake manuatres to ascertain with certainty the manner in which Mr. Lincoln and his officials nanipulate the army vole. This is the most that can be done, and those who suppose that in distant camps these amprincipled Republiena partizans will go unwatched, are mistokan. The people and the army shall know how they anve been defrauded, if they are to be swindled out of their suffrages. There must be ne votes of dead men returned; as Democratic soldiers must be detailed or otherwise deprived of their votes on the day of election. If soldiers are sent home to vote, all must go, or else the election carried by farloughing Republican coldiers, only, is void. The voting must be open, free and unicompanied by force or threats. The returns must be correctly made out.

To recapitulate : The five votes of the so called "State of West Virginia" must not be counted.

The elections must be free in all the States voting, including the States of Missouri, Kentucky, Delaware and Maryland.

No electoral votes must be counted coming from any of the seconded or subjugated States. The laws of the respective diates in regard to elections must be obsyst, including those which prohibit the stationing of soldiers with - in a certain distance of the polls. The vote of the army must be cast fairly, all voters qualified under State laws must have opportunity to cast their ballots for the candidates of their choice, and the returns must be fairly made out and given to the public. In short, there must be such an election as we have always had in this country until Abraham Lincoln essayed to rule a majority by a minority. The past elections up to his day were free ; none could be more so. We dem and the same now.
