colored soldiers at Fortress Monroe, is thus described by a correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer (Republican) : A mutinous spirit has been manifest among several of the brigades of the 25th corps since the inauguration of the Texan expedition, and there has been an outbreak or two, but as the cases were individual, and there being no evidence of preconcerted action, we abstained from publicity to exceptional cases, not wishing to furnish food for the prejudice already existing against the employment of colored men for soldiers. The colored cavalry brigad, consisting of the first, second, and fifth United States colored cavalry, made threats at City Point that they would not be "sent to Texas ;" "that the government had no right to send them there," &c. No attention was paid to these mutterings by the officers, who regarded them as the grumblings peculiar to the African race. To better fit them for the field of operations, the arms of the cavalry brigade were ordered to be exchanged at City Point. They were there furnished with new Sharps's breech-loading carbines, new accouterments, new sabers, saber belts, &c. The first batch of cavalry, were disembarked at City Point yesterday, on the propeller Wilmon Whildin, of Philsdelphis. They were brought to Hampton Roads and transferred to the steamer Meteer. Arriving in Hampton Roads, the Whilden was ordered alongside the Meteor, to transfer her compliment of men on board the largest vessel, the Metcor being of a draught too deep to go up the James river, hence the Whilden acted in the capacity of lighter. On making fast to the Meteor, some of the soldiers toki their officers "they would not go on board of her." "They would not go on board of any ocean scenner, as the government had no right to send them to Texas." The officers insisted that they should go on board the Meteor, and succeeded in transferring three companies to the large ship. The fourth company refused to obey orders, and loaded their carbines. Neither threat nor entreaty prevailed with them. They unslung their carbines, capped them and those that had no amunition in
