From Rev. W. D. Seighted, Pastor of Twel'th Baptist Church, Philada.

Gentlemen I have receably been laboring under the dates ing-effects of indigestion, accompanied by a prestration of the nervous system. Numerous rem-dies were recommended by friends, and some of them tested, but without relief. Your Hoodand's Gerwan Bitters were recommended by presons who had rised them, and whose favorable metton of these Bitters induced me to try tem. I must confess that I had an aversion to Patent Medicines from the "thousand and one" quack "Bitters' whose only aim seems to be to paim off sweetened and drugsfall ignor upon the chim saity in a sity way, and the testience of which, I feat, is to make many a confirmed drunkard Upon learning that ours was really a medicinal preparation I took it with happy effect. Its action, not only upon the ste mach, but one the nervous system, was prompt and gratifying. I feel that I have converted great and permuent boneal from the use of a few bottles. From the many respectable recommendations given to Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, I was induced to give them a trial. After using several bottles, I found them to be a good remedy for decility, and a most excellent tonic for the stomach.

> The captain and his lady packed big trunks, carpet racks and baskets, and the whole family made an exodus to the estate of the captain's brother in the Emerald Isle.

> Knockavallock was in the wild part of the Up Country, near the sea shore, and inhabited by a primitive set of people. The mansion itself was one of those old fashioned stone houses, almost like fortifications-too unpretending for a castle-with narrow mullioned windows, and a multiplicity of offices that would astonish an American. The number of windows testified that either the window tax had teen abelished, or else, at him in surprise, and exclaimed: that the proprietor was able to pay it without diminishing his light. There was an endless quantity of hiding holes about Kneckavallock, and it did not take Katie long to explore them. Molly, the chambermaid, told her in mystenious whispers that there was an old story of a ghost in the west end room, but that none I the present inhabitants had seen it, though Judy, the cook, averred that she had heard her mother say, that she heard Biddy Dennovan tell, that it had been seen once twenty years ago; and Biddy had it from Kitty Sheridan, who lived in the house at that time. Katie heard all this quietly, and would have perhaps forgotten it, had it not been for the monotony of her life at Knockavallock. The rest of the visitors did not arrive till two weeks after Captain Murben, and the time hung heavily on their hands.

One day she asked Mr. Marben for the key of the west end room. Taking it off the bunch, he said: "Don't let the ghost out, Katie."

Away she flew—but the key would not turn, and she took it down to the kitchen to get it oiled. Judy was all consternation and estreaty, but in vain; and, candle in hand, the valorous Katie made her ascent to the chamber of the ghost. Opening the door, she peeped in, a little afraid, but quickly mastering her trepidation, entered -the door re leased from her hand, shutting with a bing, and the current of air excinguishing her candle. A little flustered by this she proceeded to light a match, when her eye caught sight of a terrible white object in a far corner, which she was sure had risen out of the ground, for there was nothing there when she entered. She flew to the door, but it closed with a spring, and she had dropped the key in her alarm. Quieting herself, she followed Judy's advice, "that if anything appeared she was to cross herself and name the Trinitw." Having thus fortified herself, she struck a match and soon had the satisfaction of hold ing once more the lighted candle. The white object neither spoke nor moved, and Katie summoned up courage to approach. A hearty laugh came to her lips as she saw that the object of her alarm was a broken statue. She three open the rusty hinged shutters, and let in the light of day; and the pure breath of early summer. A high, tapestried bed was in one corner, the hangings of which, dusty and moth esten, were dropped by piece meal; beside it was on antique dressing table, and above this the picture of a lady, very pretty withal, in spite of her enormous ruff. On the other side of the apartment was an caken chest, and above it the portrait of a man, perhaps the husband of the dark beauty in the ruff; he also were the same style of neck ornament, and the immense bran bag breeches of the olden time. Katie tried to lift the lid of the chest -it was locked. She set the candle on it and went in search of Walter. In a few moments they both entered. "Why, Katie, what have you the candle burning for, it is light enough to see without! Phow! it smells musty-and what in the-I beg pardon, what sort of pantalcons has that easp?"

Katie blew out the candle, and explained her wishes in a few words; and with an energetic jerk Walter brought the lid of the chest off at the hinges. Gravely the figures came, hand in hand! the west end room pictures had stepped from their frames, and come walking down among them! Captain Marben was nearest the fomale figure-it put cut a hand and touched his. It was as cold as marble. He sprang back with a curious gutteral howl—the figure laughed a wild, unearthly laugh, and re-rested. The servants heard the uproar, and this spread the consternation; but as the company arrived the next day, they were too busy to comment much on it. Katic declared, when they told her of it, "that she would sit up every night till twelve o'clock, headache or ot, so as to see the ghost;" and Mr. Dannie Callahan, one of the visitors, declared his determination to lay the resiless spiri s

I am ashamed to tell it, but Callaban had overslipt himself that morning, and was wakened by the breakfast bell. He washed hastily, brushed his hair, without looking in the glass, and ran down stairs. Breakfast was scarcely half through, when Ka.ie looked "Why, Mr. Callaban, where have you been ! You look like a Brownie!" The rest turned their eyes the same way, and were filled with consternation. Callahan's face, neck and hands were a beautiful brown ish black. He rushed to the mirror and held up his hands in amazement, ejeculating some hrases more expressive than polite. Captain Marben had been absent from breakfast, and when he came he met Callahau in the hall, stared at the strange negro, and would have passed on; but, as Callahan spoke, the voice arrested him, and he burst into an uproarious it of laughter-

"Why, Callehan, what has changed you into a darkie! Did you do it yourself?" "Copperas and nut galls will do the same for any one-the ghost paid me a visit and hin is the effect" "Do give up that mad scheme of yours, ingly. A few days passed, with no repetition of the ghostly visits, still strange noises were heard the black was wearing off Callaban's face, and he showed the captain a revolver, saying that he was not afraid of the ghost now. The next morning all the top curls of his head wherein he much delighted were shorn, and he vowed vengeance. That evening he seated himself near Katio, who had always received him with more freedom than she accorded to the other gentlemen. drawing his chair near he said in a low tone : "Miss Katie, will you join me in the ghoat adventure?" "What! to get a complexion like yours, and loss my heir !" "I don't think there is any danger of that, basides the color is wearing off.'

"Wby not?"

"Oh, then I will go," and away they went, out into the cool balcony. "Katie, do you see the moon ?" "Yes; what of it?" "Isu't it beautiful?"

"Not particularly."
"Come, look at this flower, Katie-of what does it remind you?" " Of a large China-aster." "Oh. for shame! Where did your parents reside, Mis Katie?"

The question stung the girl, and she retreated a space or two, facing Callahau. "Sir, my parents, my parents' sins or myself, are nothing to you. Callahanodvanced and caught her, held her tight for a moment, and said:
"Witch Katie, you are all the world to Friday not a Day of Ill Omen. From time immemorial, Friday has been frowned upon as a day of ill omen. And the this prejudice is less prevalent new than it sway, yet there are many who would hesitate n a day so inauspicious to begin an undertaking of momentous import.

How many brave mariners there are whose hearts unmoved could meet the wildes fury of their ocean home, would blanch to even mend their sails on Friday.

But to show with how little reason this feeling is indulged in, let us note the following facts in our own history as a people, and we Americans have not to dread the fatal day : On Friday, August 3, 1492, Christopher Columbus sailed on his great voyage of disjovery.
