New York, Jan. 18, 1867.
Stevens has never been popular or influential at home. He had some merit as a country court lawyer; apt in presenting his strong points in a jury trial, and in detecting the weak points of an adversary. But he was incapable of addressing the court in a law argument of any depth of reasoning or of any extended research or reflection. As a jurist, his standing was always low in the profession; as a logical debater, he had no standing at all. His as is required. Fire can be kept in it through the night without danger. But he was incapable of addressing the court in a law argument of any depth of reasoning or of any extended research or reflection. As a jurist, his standing was always low in the profession; as a logical debater, he had no standing at all. His control is of the declamatory style—of the denunciatory type. He does not resemble Demosthenes, except in speaking as if pebbles were in his throat to impurt a certain lugubrious profundity to his utterance, and to inspire, by his cavernous tones, a sort of solemn awe into his audience. It is his manner, his gesticulation, his appalling seriousness, when urging some measure decidedly outrageous, that command attention. The substance of his discourse itself is devoid of pith, and dull to all of any discernment. This is obvious in every debate, whenever taken to task by the second rate men of his party. He ought never to attempt a set speech, to convince or persuade, in Congress, for he invariably fails; but to threaten and command his weak-kneed brethren, he is terrible, invincible, and never tails. Opposed to the dominant party from the outset of his career, he was not heard of in politics and the suit-massonic excitement sprang up in 1830. Elected to the Legislature, he was soon as much distinguished for his bad passions. He was generous, manly, unpretending and courteous; generally in good humor to amuse, with some happy but severe hit on anybody who thwarted him. He could as readily detect a weak point or vulnerable peculiarity in character as discover a flaw in an indictment, and by a frowning look or telling epigrammatic remark give it a ludicrous prominence not soon to be forgotten. But when raging with lauent wrath, his terse expressions were terrible, sparing neither friend or foe. His scathing sarcasm, delivered in subdued simplicity, was charming to all the cardinate of the proper method to get rid of those twin relies of barbarism, "slavery and polygamy." that before commending the principle of equal suffrage to the Southern States, the Northern States should apply it to their own citizens. What would be just to the South would be just to the North, and before the North preaches dogmatically upon the subject, it should bring its own franchise into harmony with the right.

THE Richmond Enquirer closes an editorial as follows: "We entreat the men of the North to take counsel of their own knowledge of human naturetheir interests—to remember their oaths and engagements—in their dealings with the South. If they will not admit us to our privileges at Washington, at least leave us at peace in our local affairs. between the two parties, now majorities were returned much larger than the whole number of their taxable population. It was anticipated by Stevens that these vigorous tactics in certain localities would overwhelm the opposition strength in othr portions of the State. But he was mistaken. The full returns indicated the election of the Democratic candidate for Governor by more than ten thousand majority. It was then determined by a desperate expedient to retain the control of both branches of the Legislature, and thereby possess unlimited power over the public revenues, with its corresponding influence and prestige. The Senate was already Anti-Masonic; but of the members elected to the House a small majority was the other way. To change this state of things-it was agreed that the Secretary of State should, on a slight informality, ignore the true returns from the county of Philadelphis, giving the certificate of election to the Democratic members, and that he should substitute anether return designating the minority candidates as elected. By this scheme Stevens would have a majority in that body. Thus, with have a majority in that body. Thus, with both branches of the Legislature under his guidance, the Democratic Governor soon to be inaugurated would be power-less. No one doubted that the Democrat-ic candidates in Philadelphia county had a large and decided majority of the votes at the election. Indeed, Stevens did not controvert the fact, but contended that the return of a majority of election judges was not according to law, while the other return was in due form, and must prima facie, prevail until otherwise order-ed by the House. The informality consisted in the judges retaining the document for one day in their possession, while the law provided that the return
