AN OLD MAID'S STORY.

I am old now. The gray indications of age surround my wrinkled brow and decrepit form. At times I am peevish and fretful, bewailing my lot, and wishing that my days were ended; then a sweet reminiscence of amption or Insanity may ensue. Our Flesh the past sweeps over me, and inspires me with reverence. Though I am an old maid, there are things connected with my life which afford me pleasure to contemplate.

· At the age of eighteen I was left an orphan. My mother died when I was quite young; my poor father lingered a few short cars, then, like the fragile flower, withered and died. Falling heir to my father's immense fortune, I was flattered, courted, and admired, by people of the world-not for mking the simple remedy by which knew that if I were destitute of that which has power to attract thousands; my friends would be few. I soon became restless, weary, and tired of those empty flatteries.

> At length the tortured brain hit upon wild scheme, which I determined to carry out, spite the expectations of my maid. Anastase, my waiting maid, had relative residing in a proportionately large village some six miles from W——, and there I determined to execute my project. It was a radiantly beautiful morning in the month of May. The sweet carol of birds, and the delicious perfume of the flowers, seemed to add a balm to my aching heart, and revive my drooping spirit. I was not a philanthropist; but on that beautiful morning I felt that there were others beside myself, and that the Creaor had not designed this terrestial universe or me alone to enjoy. All I now desired was a true and trusting friend, one whom I could love, and whose faithfulness the adver-

ities of life could not shake. My maid and I stood upon the portico, literally surrounded by trunks, boxes and bundles, impatiently awaiting the arrival of the rustic, lumbering stage coach. I was completely metamorphosed, having substituted he plain, comely traveling dress for my usually rich apparel. No jewelry adorned my person; it was my object to appear as one in ordinary circumstances. At an abrupt curve in the road a cloud of dust revealed to my anxious eyes the wished-for conveyance With the aid of the porter and coachman our trunks, &c., were deposited on the top: and, with a brief farewell to those at the house, we were rolling toward our new

This caprice of mine was, indeed, remark ably novel. I, the wealthy Anna D'Haven, daughter and heir of Captain D'Haven, U S. N., riding in a country stage coach; destination-an old farm house, where, in order to find some one to love me, independent of gold as a dowry. I had assumed a fictitious name and become a plain country lass. What would some of my aristocratic friends say? First, the old time-worn barn, then a cluster of freshly painted comfortable cottages revealed our wished-for destination. It was the "dawn of a new cra" to me.

"Miss Howard, I believe," said a portly old gentleman, advancing to where my maid and I stood.

It was Anastase's uncle. He had come to meet us, with the waron. "I am she," I answered, slightly bowing,

I cannot describe my state of mind as I brought to a close by the termination of our journey. "This, then, is to be my temporary home," said I, looking at the old, antique-looking house looming up from pmong large and shady willows.

I was introduced to the inmates, and then Mrs. Williams (a kind, gentle matron of two score and ten-one whom I shall always remember with a feeling akin to awe,) accompanied me to my room. After expressing nany wishes and apologies, she said: "My dear Anna-for such I must call you you must make yourself perfectly at home.

"Anna," he said, in his low, immonious voice, which sounded like music to my ear-'Anna, will you be my wife? Will you link your destiny with that of a gambler?" "A gambler!" I gasped, disengaging my self from him, and gazing with terror into his pallid face. "A gambler I have been, but I have renounced that hellish life. I mean to reform, to make myself worthy of the name I bear and all for you, because I love you. It was not my choice, Heaven knows 'twas not! I was driven to it. I was a spendthrift; became dissipated and reckless. My father twice threatened to discard me. I did not heed his threat. I became involved in debt; appealed to my father, promising to reform, but he ordered me from the house. There was only one resource left, and that I adopted, l became a gambler." She made no answer. But that evening, as I bade her "good night," she fondly drew me to her, and fervently pronounced a blessing. The morning dawned radiant and beautiful. Mrs. Williams greeted me with a merry "good morning," inquired after my health, and invited me to partake of a frugal meal she had prepared for me. Then came the final leave-taking, and in a short time I was on my homeward journey.

The servants were somewhat surprised at my unlooked for arrival. I left Anastase to make all explanations, and sought my room. immediately changed my dusty garments that I wished to see him concerning material wrote his address on the envelope, and placed the note in my writing desk, intending to send it on the morrow. I lay listening to the rain beating against my window, thinking of my all-absorbing and only love—thinking of the rescaing from the jaws of an untimely grave -from the yawning gulf of perpetual perslumber, when I was awakened by a slight noise in the direction of the window. A noise too loud to be caused by the rain, and too low, I thought, to be made by a human being. I raised myself in bed, and peered through the darkness. The light which I generally kept burning flickered dimly, cast

Female Suffrage. Mark Twain is publishing a series of articles on Female Suffrage in the St. Louis Democrat. Some of his arguments in opposition to the measure are original and amusing. He says that even now they are so fond of office that they are continually getting up associations of all kinds, and running for President of them without pay, but once allow them to vote and go to the Legislature, and they will start a thousand more societies; and cram them full of salaried officers. Instead of the usual fee-bill for judges, State printer, &c., he says the list would read something like

You know what a state of anarchy and You know what a state of anarchy and social chaos that fee-bill would create. Every woman in the Commonwealth of Missouri would let go everything and run for State Milliner. And instead of ventilating each other's political antecedents, as men do, they would go straight after each other's private moral churacter. (I know them—they are all like my wift.) Before the canvass was two days old it would be an established propestion, that every woman in the State was think how it would lacerate me to have an

At last I resolved to "pop the question," and fixed on my next visit for the time, studied "Courtship Made Easy" thoroughly, and concluded I was ready for the task. The time arrived. Here I was, sitting by the side of my beloved, with my arm the Cabinet; and his present freedom will rearound her waist. I took her hand in mine, and screwed up my courage to say: "Dear Ella, do you love me?" She made no answer, but her eyes were cast down and I view of the case; and Judge Chase, he holds, hoped. Yes, I was certain that she loved is responsible for the result, as the Judge, me. I put both my arms around her neck, during the war, decided that the rebels were and pressed one, two, three kisses on her rosy lips. She did not resist, but raised her of the blockade-runners in prize courts, and head and said: "You're as bad as Sam belligerents cannot be tried for treason. To Simmons!" Books.—Give us a house furnished with books, rather than furniture. Both, if you can; but books at any rate. To spend several days in a friend's house, and hungry for something to read, while you are treading on costly carpets, and sitting down on luxurlons chairs, and sleeping upon down, is as if one were bribing your body for the sake of cheating your mind. Books are the windows through which the soul looks out. A house without books is like a room without windows. A book is good company; it is Frequently he would be seen at sunrise, with poultry in one hand and vegetables in the other. On one of these occasions a fashionable young man from the North, who had removed to Richmond, Va., was swearing violently because he could find no one to carry home his turkey; Marshall stepped up and asked where he lived, and on being told. said: "That is my way, and I will take it for you." When he came to the house, the young man inquired: "What shall I pay you?" "Oh, nothing," said the Chief Justice, "it was on my way, and no trouble." Who was that polite old man that brought home my turkey?" inquired the young man of a bystander. "That," replied he, "is John Marshall, Chief Justice of the United States." "Why did he bring home my turkey?" asked he. "To give you a severe reprimand, and teach you to attend to your own business," was the reply. self. IRREFRAGIBLE PROOF. - A Philadelphia gentleman of festive tastes, who takes a "fair shake" at all the obtainable pleasures of the town, last week assisted at a heavy dinner, took much portable, and did not leave for home until ever-so-many o'clock. On reaching his door steps and fishing up his night key, he became convinced that he was essentially convivialized and not precisely in the condition which a good husband should be to meet a good wife. Cautiously entering the hall he stopped, listened a moment, heard no noise, and congratulated himself that the family were asleep. Quietly he took off overcoat, drew off boots, turned off hall light, slowly ascended stairs to family bed-room, hesitated at door, believed he was reasonably right, stealthily entered, found gas turned low, wife apparently asleep, thought she ecas asleep, sat down, listened again, no stir; began to undress; got coat, vest, pants, drawers, stockings, all safely off; was journeying carefully toward couch, when wife of his bosom quietly asked s "Coming to bed, dear?" "Yes, love." "Well, dear, hadn't you better

THE TRUE RICHES .- A beautiful reply is recorded of a Dalecarlian peasant, whose master was displaying to him the grandest of his estates. Farms, houses and forests were pointed out in succession, on every hand, as the property of the rich proprietor, who summed up finally by saying: "In short, ful for a moment; then, pointing up to Heaven, solemnly replied: "And is that, also, thine?"
